The phony empire of the KKK was bared and wrecked in that part of the Carolinas. Men in Tabor City, in Whiteville, in all Columbus County, now could answer their doorbells at night without fear. They could hold up their heads without shame. And the nation was strengthened by this victory of decency and justice.

The two editors, Carter and Cole—what of them?

They were awarded the Certificate of Merit of the North Carolina Press Association.

They were awarded the Distinguished Service Plaque by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

They were given the Sidney Hillman Foundation Award.

Carter was named Man of the Year of the North Carolina Junior Chamber of Commerce. (Cole couldn't qualify because he is 47, past the Junior Chamber age limit of 35.)

Pulitzer Prize Awarded

May 4, 1953, their two newspapers were jointly awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Disinterested and Meritorious Public Service, the first time that this highest award has gone to a weekly newspaper, the Tabor City Tribune—circulation 1,600; and a semi-weekly, the News Reporter of Whiteville—circulation 5,600.

Who are these two men of the South, these two editors of whom the South is so proud? What of their background out of which came such intelligence and courage?

The story about the two of them, perhaps the chief interest in their past, is the lack of anything particularly notable. They are just the run of the South, born on Southern rural soil, and they prove that such a heritage, such an environment, is good enough to breed men of character, of determination, of such fortitude that they will risk everything in a fight where a principle is at stake.

Both Carter and Cole were born in North Carolina, each born on a farm. Each had a tough time getting through school and Cole didn't get very far, dropping out after high school. Carter went on to the University of North Carolina, working eight hours a day and paying his way through.

In the summers, Carter hauled ice, worked in hotdog stands and did his first newspapering, writing sports, for a semi-

Turn to Page 5F

EXTRA THE NEWS REPORTER EXTRA

10 FLOGGERS NABBED

Two Former Cops Bagged In Roundup

NEWS REPORTER ON FEB. 16, 1952 TOLD OF ARREST OF 10 KU KLUX KLANSMEN BY FBI AGENTS
Cole Bobtailed Klan Slogan in Front Page Photo, Leaving It Only "Yesterday"

NEXT SUNDAY'S MAGAZINE: GOV. TALMADGE GIVES

The Atlanta Journal AND

Editors Fought for Principle Against Klan

Continued From Page 1F

weekly, The Stanley News and Press, in Albemarle, N.C.

Varied Jobs

Cole worked as a doffer in a cotton mill, worked with a road crew, worked at first one job and then another until he walked into the office of The Wilkes Journal, a North Wilkesboro weekly, and got a job as a handyman.

During the war, Carter was in the Navy, enlisting as an apprentice seaman, ending as an ensign serving at sea. Cole was making out as best he could after a nervous breakdown that sent him hunting health and stability into Panama, Costa Rica and back to Akron, Ohio, where he worked for the Firestone Aircraft, making wings for the C-46. He invented a drilling device which speeded production and won him an award of $230.

It won him more than that. It won him back his confidence and, despite repeated attacks of malaria he had picked up in Costa Rica as a tractor operator, he looked anything in the face and was not afraid. "After what I'd been through, after the long tussle within myself, this fight with the Ku Klux Klan wasn't anything to be scared of."

Carter went to Tabor City in 1946. He went to get a job. Before long, he founded the Tabor City Tribune. Total assets: one second-hand desk, one $15 typewriter, himself and his wife.

Today, seven years later, he and a partner of the same age, Mark C. Garner, own five newspapers: the Tribune in Tabor City, the Myrtle Beach Sun, the Ocean Beach News, the Conway Field, the Loris Sentinel.

The partnership does an annual business of about $150,000.

Carter's greatest profit is Linda, his 7-year-old daughter, and Rusty, his 4-year-old son.

Folks Liked Him

Cole drifted into Tabor City, too, and took a job as executive secretary of the Tabor City Merchants Association. Folks liked him and, a year later, Leslie S. Thompson, publisher of the News Reporter in nearby Whiteville, approached Cole and they hit it off.

Thompson asked Cole to edit the paper. Cole said he would, if he could have a free rein. Thompson agreed and kept his word so true that when Cole began to fight the Klan, Thompson let him alone even though Thompson's paper, his property and he himself were in the same risk that Cole was taking.

Cole's son, John William, age 19, is now a sophomore at Duke University. His daughter, Mary Joe, age 22, is a graduate of Meredith College and is married. Prem P. Singh, her husband, is a postgraduate student in the School of Business Administration at Harvard.

Both papers, the Tabor City Tribune and the Whiteville News Reporter, do job printing and Carter prints a paper he doesn't own, the Fairmont, N.C., weekly, printing it under contract.

There are 11 employes at the paper in Whiteville. There are eight in Tabor City, but Carter has a total of 27 employes on all his five papers.

Other Jobs Offered

Both Cole and Carter have been offered newspaper jobs in the South and in other parts of the country. Neither is interested in leaving Columbus County, North Carolina.

"No better place in the world than the South," Cole said. "And I'd rather live in a small town. You know everybody. Everybody is your neighbor."

That's true, too. I talked to lots of folks in Whiteville—Hugh Nance, sheriff of the county (who played a strong part in cleaning out the Klan); Floyd Whitman, chief of police; L. P. Ward, produce dealer and farmer; Herman Leder, owner of a department store; John McNeil, druggist. They all said Willard Cole was a good man, a good citizen who had done a heap of good in Whiteville.

I talked with Ralph Collier in Whiteville, and Bobby Brooks, two of the Klansmen who had been convicted and were out of prison on suspended sentences. They said they liked Mr. Cole. Liked him plenty. It was a good thing he fought the Klan. "No telling how much trouble we might have got into, if we'd kept going," said young Brooks, whose father, Early Brooks, is still in a Federal penitentiary for his part in the Klan floggings.

Elected Mayor

As for the people of Tabor City and what they think of Carter, they elected him mayor of their town at the last election. Elected him by a vote of five to one. "We don't get a chance to vote for a Pulitzer Prize winner every election," A. C. Edwards, agent for the Atlantic Coast Line, told me. And E. W. Fonville, president of the Tabor City Marketing Company, said: "We were proud to vote for so fine a young man as Horace Carter."

We people in the South haven't fixed everything just right as yet, not by a long shot. We've got a lot to do. But we can have full faith in our future so long as we keep on breeding men like Horace Carter and Willard Cole.

SUGAR CANE STRIKE IN LA.

By MICHAEL HARRINGTON

In 1879, the Knights of Labor led a strike of ex-slaves on the sugar cane plantations of Louisiana. It was broken by the state militia, and the strike leaders who had just been freed from slavery were sent to prison for trespassing on the property of the planters.

Last month, in 1953, the first strike began on the same plantations. Little had changed in seventy five years. The working and living conditions were about the same. And the plantation owners were about the same.

The strike involves over two thousand cane workers, about three quarters of them Negro, who are organized into the National Agricultural Workers Union, AFL.

It has been met by bitter and violent anti-union tactics on the part of the plantation owners.

An injunction has been sought by the owners denying that the workers have a right to organize. The theory is that since they are covered by a government wage-fixing program, and are not specifically mentioned in various labor laws, that they have no right to organize. If the injunction were to be sustained—enjoining the workers from "restraining trade"—the organization of agricultural workers would be set back to the time of the 1879 strike in Louisiana.

In some areas, overseers have been deputized by law enforcement officers. Under the guise of legality, they are able to terrorize and intimidate the strikers.

(Continued on page 8)

Sugar Cane Strike in Louisiana

(Continued from page 1)

In other areas, eviction suits have been brought against the workers—to date 200 families (a thousand people) have been faced with eviction.

Still another strike breaking technique is the cutting off of water, fuel and light.

The Dixiecrat American Sugar Cane League libelously attacked the National Sharecroppers Fund, an organization attempting to help the union, as being a Communist front. This smear attempt is made against a group whose board includes such well known anti-Communists as Dr. Frank Graham and Norman Thomas.

Wages

In 1937, Congress passed a law empowering the Secretary of Agriculture to determine a "fair and reasonable" wage rate on sugar cane and beet plantations.

This year, Secretary of Agriculture Benson set the "fair and reasonable wage." It is $3.85½ for a nine-hour day—or something over forty cents an hour, but not too much over. The figures become much worse when they are put into the context of an annual wage.

Skilled workers in this area receive $1,000 to $1,200 a year.

For unskilled labor, the figure is between $700 and $800 a year.

The average annual wage for all field workers is between $500 and $600.

A survey of the Bureau of National Affairs indicated that in 1947-52 period, an income of $3,871 was necessary for a family of four. Yet among these plantation workers a household of 10 or 12 children is not unknown.

In addition, the workers are only payed for work when they arrive in the fields—although an hour's work on a machine might be required before then.

Paternalism

The entire wage-living-condition set up is intensified by the paternalism of the owners. Small loans, company houses, company stores and the incredibly low wage rates manage to keep the worker close to the slavery from which he was theoretically liberated by the Civil War.

Moreover, as Stephen Ryan pointed out in America, the situation involves the exploitation of illiterates and of Negroes. The workers in the field have been apathetic to union organization in many instances. Living in a near-feudal world that has changed little since the militia broke the strike in 1879, often illiterate, they sometimes would defend their boss as a "good boss" because of a small loan or bail put up for a Saturday night spree.

The Negro is caught—as he is almost everywhere in the South—because the racist structure of society relegates him to the job which the white man doesn't want. He maintains the plantation system, out of the sweat of his labor, because color lines bar him from any decent kind of job.

Housing is in the same condition as wages: feudal. Running water is rare. Tank cars are used to bring in water in some areas (all the easier for the owners to cut the water supply off), and in other sections, water from stagnant bayous is used for drinking water. On other plantations, rain water is used.

Catholic Support

Catholic priests and laymen have been actively supporting the organization of these workers for years. Union meetings have been held in parish halls. According to the America article, the Josephite Fathers, who work among the Negroes in the sugar cane district, have been particularly militant.

The Catholic Committee of the South issued a forthright statement on the issues in the strike: "That issue — transcending all others—is one on which the Catholic Committee of the South may not remain silent—regardless of the validity of conflicting claims of management and labor relative to wages, housing or conditions of work, and that is the basic, moral right of any workers, industrial or agricultural, to organize.

"Catholic employers in particular, but all employers in general, are reminded of the clear language of Pope Leo XIII when he stated: 'We wish to be understood as referring in a special manner to the working classes, who assuredly have the right to unite into associations for the promotion of their interests, a right acknowledged by the Church and unopposed by nature." (Longinque Oceani) . . .'

"In addition to the right to organize every man has the obligation, where necessary, to protect the security of his economic interests, not only for his own welfare, but also for the welfare of his family. In the formation of a union, the agricultural workers are exercising their God-given right and seeking better to secure the economic and social welfare of their families."

Other support has come. On October 17, the Cuban Federation of Labor and its affiliate, the Sugar Workers Federation, advised the AFL of their solidarity with the strike and requested information as to action that should be taken to help. They were requested to embargo all raw sugar produced in Cuba and shipped to refineries owned by Louisiana Sugar Corporation, whose plantation workers are on strike.

George Meany, President of the AFL, wrote H. L. Mitchell, Agricultural Workers President, "The American Federation of Labor will use its best efforts to prevent any group of workers from being denied their fundamental right to organize into a trade union and bargain with their employers on matters concerning wages, hours and other conditions of employment."

The issues are clear:

The employers must accept the existence of a union which speaks for the workers (the original strike vote was 1,808 for, 8 against); and the employers must admit the right of agricultural workers to organize.

Only then can the feudalism and racist exploitation of the plantation system be fought and overthrown. Only then can the workers of the Louisiana sugar cane fields go beyond 1879—and emancipate themselves from paternalism and company violence and peonage.

Probe Case of Pair In Hospitals After Friday Night Flare

LHOUSE & INFMO 12-12-63

The brutal beating of a father and his son by town officers and a mob of whites estimated at 20 or more last Friday night near Columbia came to light here Wednesday as relatives of the men, both in hospitals and under sedatives, sought assistance.

The victims are identified as Edisto DeVeaux, who is said to live about one mile out of Eastover, and his son, Herman DeVeaux, who lives at Gadsden.

The father, said by relatives to have sustained head injuries, a cut or stabbed stomach and other hurts, is a patient at the Columbia Hospital. The younger DeVeaux is at the Veterans Hospital. The father is a veteran of World War One; the son of World War Two.

Both are charged with being drunk and resisting an arrest. Their cases were reportedly being investigated late Wednesday by sheriff S. S. Sligh's office and, among other things, pending sufficient recovery of the pair to permit questioning when they weren't under the influence of opiates.

Mrs. Ophelia DeVeaux, wife of one and mother of the other man, along with their eldest son Enoch DeVeaux and his wife said that the father, driving a 1951 light green Chevrolet, had taken his son Herman into town about ten thirty Friday night to collect some money an unidentified man is said to have owed him. As they entered town, they told newsmen, they were stopped by two town officers and charged with over-running a stop sign. The son was driving. There were no other passengers reported in the car at the time.

Relatives say that the father protested the charge and a dispute followed. Mrs. DeVeaux said her husband told her that the officers summoned help and that some 20 or more white men quickly joined them, the combined groups soundly beating and injuring them.

In Jail All Night

The two men remained in jail at Eastover until near or shortly after noon Saturday, being removed to the respectively named hospitals.

Both have been released from custody pending a trial under bond. The father is out on $200 bond and the son $100. Relatives said word of the arrests and beatings reached them late Friday night.

THE CHILD

NOVEMBER 1950

Childrens Youth

The American Parents Committee, Inc.

A Child Welfare Organization working for More and Better Schools, and for Adequate Health and Social Welfare Services for the Nation's 50 Million Children

Kindly address your reply to office checked: ☐ WASHINGTON OFFICE: 132 Third St., S. E. ☒ NATIONAL OFFICE: 52 Vanderbilt Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

RECEIVED
Southern Regional Council

May 12, 1952

TO THE APC BOARD OF DIRECTORS AND NATIONAL COUNCIL MEMBERS:

This letter is to report to you the progress made on the plan, which was voted at our last Board of Directors meeting, to present child welfare and education planks to the Political Party Conventions.

After consultation with several of you this is the way we have tentatively decided to go about it. First, we will try to get a prominent Republican and a prominent Democrat to be our spokesmen before the Platform Committees of the respective conventions. We hope to have two good people lined up for that job shortly, but in case the two we have in mind cannot accept, we will be grateful for your idea as to who would be good and who could be persuaded to do it.

We propose to send letters to prominent members of each party telling them of our plan and urging them to write their ideas to the pre-Convention Platform Committee of their party. In a second letter we will ask them to send us a carbon of the letter so our spokesmen can present it to the Convention Committee. Please send us the names and addresses of prominent Republicans and Democrats to whom you think such letters should be written. Be sure to designate their party.

In accordance with Board action, we will invite the cooperation of other organizations in this venture. Enclosed is a preliminary draft of the planks we propose to submit. They are the result of considerable discussion with party leaders and others in the field, but it is not too late to consider any ideas you have to improve them.

We have had nothing but encouragement from all with whom we have discussed our plan. It seems evident that such planks as those we propose would strengthen each of the party platforms. Most people agree that we must emphasize to party leaders that parents want it made crystal clear that while the U. S. strengthens its ramparts against aggression, it will not neglect the children who will become the citizens and leaders of tomorrow. I hope I may have as soon as possible your lists, your suggestions, and your criticisms, if any. Thank you!

Sincerely yours,

George J. Hecht

GEORGE J. HECHT
Chairman

Encs.

See reverse side for the APC's Officers, Board of Directors, and National Council

The APC's Officers, Board of Directors and National Council Members

Chairman

GEORGE J. HECHT—President of The Parents' Institute, Inc. (Publishers of Parents' Magazine). Founder and Secretary for 20 years of the Welfare Council of New York City; Vice-Pres., Social Legislation Information Service

Vice-Chairmen

MRS. GERTRUDE FOLKS ZIMAND — General Secretary, National Child Labor Committee

RICHARD H. WELS — Chairman, Special Committee on the Improvement Family Laws, New York City Bar Association

MRS. DOROTHY CANFIELD FISHER— Novelist and Educator, Arlington, Vermont

ROBERT L. JOHNSON — President, Temple University, Philadelphia; Chairman, Nat'l Citizens' Committee for Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government

Treasurer

HAROLD A. RICH—Vice President, Chase National Bank, New York

Secretary

MELVYN GORDON LOWENSTEIN—Attorney, New York; Secretary, Baby Ruth Foundation

Executive Director—in Washington Office

ADA BARNETT STOUGH

NOTE: The officers, directors and National Council members listed on this letterhead may not personally endorse (nor are the organizations with which they are associated in anyway committed to) each piece of legislation favored or opposed by the APC. The APC's position on each piece of federal legislation for children in which it interests itself is determined by its Board of Directors, which gives its approval only if a large majority of its members concur.

JOSEPH P. ANDERSON, Executive Secretary, American Association of Social Workers

MRS. LOUIS AZRAEL, Former newspaper writer, Board Member, YM & YWHA of Baltimore, Md.

DAVID BAIRD, President of the Baird Foundation and the Lansing Foundation, New York

RUSSELL W. BALLARD, Director Hull House Association, Chicago, Ill.

GEORGE V. DENNY, JR., Moderator, Town Meeting of the Air

MRS. WENDELL D. DORNAN*, Muscatine, Iowa; Former Executive Director of the American Parents Committee

DR. HILDEGARD DURFEE*, Brattleboro, Vt. Child psychologist; Former Supervisor of WPA Rhode Island Nursery Schools

MAXIMILIAN ELSER, President, Elser & Cothran, New York

MRS. JOSEPH R. FARRINGTON, President, National Federation of Women's Republican Clubs, Washington, D.C.

DR. BENJAMIN FINE, Education Editor of the New York Times

MRS. HERBERT F. FISHER, Hartford, Conn. Treasurer, Child Welfare League of America, Inc.

DR. ROMA GANS, Prof. of Education, Teachers College, Columbia University; Board Member, Citizens' Committee on Children of New York

MR. D. SAMUEL GOTTESMAN, President, Gottesman Foundation

LESTER B. GRANGER, Executive Director, National Urban League

MAX GRANT, President of Money Meters, Inc., Providence, R.I.

CARL A. GRAY, President of the Grenby Manufacturing Co., Plainville, Conn. Member of Connecticut Fact-Finding Commission on Education

MRS. LUTHER GULICK, Board Member, Consumers League of New York

MISS HELEN HALL, Director, Henry Street Settlement, New York. Chairman, National Association of Consumers

DR. HAROLD C. HAVIGHURST*, Dean, School of Law, Northwestern University, Chicago, Ill.

MRS. GEORGE J. HECHT, President, Ass'n of Neighbors & Friends of Hunter College; Board Member, New York Society for the Orthopedically Handicapped

CARLOS L. ISRAELS, New York attorney; Treasurer, United Service for New Americans

MRS. ARCHIE O. JOSLIN

MERRILL KRUGHOFF*, Director, Health & Welfare Planning, Community Chests and Councils of America

DR. MARY FISHER LANGMUIR, President of the Child Study Association of America; Head of the Department of Child Study, Vassar College

MRS. ALBERT D. LASKER, Co-Chairman, National Mental Health Committee

MRS. SAMUEL A. LEWISOHN, Chairman of the Board, Public Education Association of New York City; member of National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools

B. ALDEN LILLYWHITE, Vice-Chairman, Arlington, Va. Citizens' Committee for School Improvement

MRS. CLARA SAVAGE LITTLEDALE, Editor, Parents' Magazine

MRS. OSWALD B. LORD, Chairman, U. S. Committee of the U. N. International Children's Emergency Fund; President, National Health Council

DR. ALFRED J. MARROW, President, Harwood Manufacturing Corp., New York; Lecturer, New School of Social Research

MRS. JINX FALKENBURG McCRARY, Radio commentator

DR. GEORGE S. MITCHELL*, Executive Director, Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Ga.

MRS. CHARLES MONROE, Board Member of Child Welfare League of America. Former Executive, Junior League of New York City

GEORGE W. NAUMBURG, Chairman of the Finance Committee, Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, New York; President of the Baron de Hirsh Fund

MRS. SAMUEL I. NEWHOUSE, Wife of the publisher of a chain of twelve newspapers

BASIL O'CONNOR, President, Nat'l Foundation for Infantile Paralysis; Former President, American Nat'l Red Cross

MRS. LIONEL C. PERERA, JR.

MR. LEO PERLIS, National Director, Nat'l CIO Community Services Committee

COL. HAROLD RIEGELMAN, Partner of Nordinger, Riegelman & Benetar, New York law firm. Counsel for New York Citizens Budget Commission

OSCAR V. ROSE, Superintendent of Schools of Midwest City, Okla.

DR. ROBERT SEARS*, Director, Laboratory of Human Development, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

DR. GEORGE N. SHUSTER, President of Hunter College, New York

MRS. HAROLD A. STONE, Arlington, Va. Former Vice-President, League of Women Voters of the U. S.

PROF. L. JOSEPH STONE, Child Study Dep't., Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

MRS. ALVIN THALHEIMER, Former member of Maryland State Board of Education

MRS. DE FOREST VAN SLYCK*, Washington, D. C.; former Executive of National Association of Junior Leagues

MRS. ARTHUR WHITE, Mayor, Red Bank, N. J.

MISS ELIZABETH WICKENDEN, Former Washington Representative of the American Public Welfare Association

MRS. JOSEPH WILLEN, Chairman, Legislative Committee of Nat'l Council of Jewish Women

The Chairman, the first two Vice-Chairmen and the Secretary (see other side) are also members of the Board of Directors

*A member of the APC's National Council which is in the process of formation

PLANKS ON CHILD WELFARE AND EDUCATION

PROPOSED FOR THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY PLATFORM

The education and welfare of children has long been a strong tenet of the Democratic party. During its nineteen years of leadership, active and effective programs for children have been promoted and encouraged. In this time of emergency, when the long-term security of the country is at stake, we recognize more than ever our responsibility toward those who will soon be guiding the affairs of the nation. Adequate provisions must be made for their education, health and welfare. Expenditures for these purposes will not only contribute to our defense against possible aggression but they are wise investments for a nation desiring to live in peace. To this end the Democratic Party pledges its support of:

ADEQUATE EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES FOR CHILDREN

Recognizing the shortage of school buildings and the limitation of educational opportunity in many States, we will endeavor to establish:

A Federal Aid to Education program which will include aid for school construction and for the maintenance of public elementary and secondary schools throughout the country.

A Federal Scholarship Program under which capable students unable financially to attend college or university may obtain such an education.

ADVANCEMENT OF THE HEALTH AND WELFARE OF THE NATION'S CHILDREN

In accordance with the tradition and past record of the Party, we will continue to support:

The extension of the activities of the U. S. Children's Bureau to enable it to expand its research program and to help the States to work more effectively in the fields of maternal and child health, rehabilitation of crippled children, parent education and the prevention of juvenile delinquency.

The continuation of the National School Lunch Program to reduce malnutrition and assure a more healthful citizenry for the future.

Provisions to meet the needs of children whose mothers are helping to produce the material for defense, children whose uniformed fathers are sharing the military burden, and children of migratory workers.

Planks proposed by the
AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE
National Office: 52 Vanderbilt Ave., New York 17, N. Y.
Washington Office: 132 Third St., S. E.

Welfare, Child

PLANKS ON THE EDUCATION AND WELFARE OF THE NATION'S CHILDREN

PROPOSED FOR THE REPUBLICAN PARTY PLATFORM

The Republican Party recognizes that our long-term strength and security lies in the children of today who must direct and defend the nation of tomorrow. We believe that the education, training, health, and well-being of these children are important parts of any defense program as well as wise investments for the future.

To that end the Republican Party pledges its support of:

ADEQUATE EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES FOR CHILDREN

Because of the shortage of school facilities and the inability of many local communities to finance such building, we will support:

A program of Federal aid to the States for the construction of public school buildings; and the construction and maintenance of schools in the critical defense areas.

ADVANCEMENT OF THE HEALTH AND WELFARE OF THE NATION'S CHILDREN

Without violation of the traditional principle of the sanctity of the home and in accordance with the accepted principle of Federal-State partnership, we will specifically support:

The extension of the activities of the U. S. Children's Bureau, (established under a Republican President) to enable it to expand its research program and to help the States to work more effectively in the fields of maternal and child health, rehabilitation of crippled children, parent education and the prevention of juvenile delinquency.

The continuation of the National School Lunch Program as a means of reducing malnutrition and assuring more healthful citizens for the future.

Provisions for essential services for children whose mothers are helping to produce defense materials, children whose fathers have been called to the armed forces, and children of migratory workers.

Planks proposed by the
AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE
National Office: 52 Vanderbilt Ave., New York 17, N. Y.
Washington Office: 132 Third St., S. E.

Let's Talk About TOMORROW

The New York Times, January 22, 1954

LEAFLET WILL AID IN ADVISING YOUTH

Child Guidance Group to Put Out Pamphlet to Help in Counseling on Jobs

Half the youngsters who enter the nation's high schools drop out before they graduate. The shortage of vocational counselors in schools being what it is, even those who remain may get no more than one five or ten minute guidance interview in their school years.

Mindful of this situation, specialists for the National Child Labor Committee are putting final touches to a new guidance leaflet which—though intended primarily for teachers—may be equally interesting and stimulating to parents.

Mrs. Florence Taylor and Miss Gloria Bley of the research department of the committee explained yesterday that the pamphlet, "Let's Talk About Tomorrow," was designed to help those without vocational counseling training to supplement the work of guidance specialists. Too many youngsters, they declared, leave school without much preparation for getting a job. This lack of information often leads to confusion, wasted time and wasted motion.

"We believe," Miss Bley said, "that much of this waste can be prevented if the youngsters can be stimulated to think about preparation for jobs while still in school."

Points for Family Talks

Although a formal outline for parent-child discussions of job futures would be unrealistic and out of keeping with the facts of family life, Miss Bley said many of the points covered in the new pamphlet might well be raised by parents in informal talks on this subject with their young. Copies of the pamphlet, to be available in about two weeks, will be 10 cents from the National Child Labor Committee, 419 Fourth Avenue, New York 16.

In thinking about the "right" job future, both parents and adolescents might want to consider the matter of preference, based on the individual's interests, abilities and training, and its relationship with existing employment materials. Some young persons prefer working with tools and machines; others with books, ideas or people. Many like to work with others; some do their best work alone.

Discussion of points such as these might lead into a general talk about job direction and stimulate thinking of youth on such points as job-suitability and the changing labor market.

Other topics considered in the outline are the school as preparation for employment, first steps in finding a job, necessary papers for employment, applying for work, the interview and, finally, keeping the job and advancing in it.

The pamphlet follows logically the development of a similar publication for use soon in Philadelphia schools in connection with a special week set aside to stress preparation for employment. The original leaflet contained considerable material specifically on Pennsylvania labor laws and regulations, which is presented in more general form in the newer edition.

a discussion guide for teachers and parents with a number of provocative questions for youngsters on the ins and outs of getting a job

Available Now!

NATIONAL CHILD LABOR COMMITTEE
419 Fourth Ave. • New York 16, N. Y.

I enclose $..... for .....copies of Let's Talk About Tomorrow. (Single copies 10¢, 50 or more 8¢, 100 or more 5¢ each)

Name.....

Agency.....

Address.....

.....

Your Child
A Must List for Parents!
Seven popular and fascinating Government publications covering CHILD CARE from birth to the "teens." Selected by Superintendent of Documents, Washington 25, D. C.

CHECK PUBLICATIONS DESIRED

TO ALL OF US, the welfare, health, and growth of our children is uppermost in our minds. We strive daily to better ourselves and our children; to provide them with good homes, healthful food, constructive recreation, and adequate education. Realizing this, and appreciating the feelings of parents, the Superintendent of Documents has carefully selected, and listed here, several of the more popular Government publications dealing with the care and guidance of children from birth to their "teens."

Several of these books have reached the best-seller stage and are followed closely by the others, but regardless of their sales records, all of these publications have a common aim—to help you better understand your children and guide them through life.

PRENATAL CARE

☐ Although the first edition of this booklet appeared over a third of a century ago, its recent and revised edition has been gaining new readers by the hundreds. Read by thousands of parents, it helps both mothers and fathers prepare for parenthood. It does not, and is not intended to, take the place of a doctor, but supports his professional advice and guidance. (1949) 76 pages, with illustrations.

Catalog No. FS 3.209:4/2 15 cents

INFANT CARE

☐ Undoubtedly, this amazing book on the care of infants is one of the most widely read publications of our time. It gives to you the information usually requested by all parents in caring for their baby—especially a first baby. Based on the experience of many doctors, and designed to help parents understand their doctor's advice, many phases of infant care, such as feeding, clothing, sanitation, and others, are interestingly presented in this much-requested book. (1947) 126 pages, with illustrations.

Catalog No. FS 3.209:8 15 cents

YOUR CHILD FROM ONE TO SIX

☐ After a child's first year, parents often look for someone or something to turn to when they face the problems of properly caring for their children. This manual is an excellent source of information for these parents. It gives information on preserving health and preventing diseases, teeth, food and eating habits, sleep and sleep habits, clothing, play, the child's development, and the sick child. There is also a chapter on communicable diseases and their symptoms. If you want well-considered advice from the best authorities, you should have this manual on child care. (1945) 147 pages, with illustrations.

Catalog No. FS 3.209:30 20 cents

YOUR CHILD FROM SIX TO TWELVE

☐ While innumerable books have been written about the infant and the preschool child, few have been devoted to the school-age child. This booklet covers that 6–12 period, which is just as important as the years that have been passed. It is offered as a means of helping parents who are seeking help in the guidance of their school-age children. (1949) 141 pages, with illustrations.

Catalog No. FS 3.209:324 20 cents

GUIDING THE ADOLESCENT

☐ A parent's interest in the welfare of his child begins long before birth and lasts all his life, but his methods of expressing this interest necessarily undergo many changes as his child grows up. This booklet shows the parent how to guide his child through the difficult period of adolescence, giving him helpful hints on the child's physical growth and development, mental changes, and social conduct. (1949) 83 pages, with illustrations.

Catalog No. FS 3.209:225 25 cents

FOR THE CHILDREN'S BOOKSHELF

☐ For the young child books are pleasure-giving; they encourage the love of beauty and they broaden a child's world. This pamphlet provides the concerned parent with a selected list of books that children will enjoy and profit from. The list provides the titles of the books, grouped into classes with reference to the child's interests and levels of development. (1949) 41 pages, with illustrations.

Catalog No. FS 3.209:304/2 15 cents

HOME PLAY AND PLAY EQUIPMENT FOR THE PRESCHOOL CHILD

☐ Play is the child's way of learning, of finding out about everything in the world around him; and since play is a serious thing to a child, it should be planned for seriously by his parents. Here is a complete guide for supervising your child's play. It tells about his playing alone and with other children; talks about parties and Christmas; describes toys, books, and pictures; and shows how to make practical, healthful, and safe outdoor play equipment for the preschool child. (1946) 19 pages, with illustrations.

Catalog No. FS 3.209:238 15 cents

Prices subject to change without notice . . .

Supplies are limited . . .

16—64467-1

Use order blank on back →

To: The Superintendent of Documents
U. S. Government Printing Office
Washington 25, D. C.

Enclosed find $..... (Cash, check, or money order). Please send me the publications I have checked.

PLEASE FILL IN MAILING LABEL BELOW

Name .....

Street .....

City, Zone No., and State .....

U. S. Government Printing Office
Division of Public Documents
Washington 25, D. C.

OFFICIAL BUSINESS

Return After Five Days

PENALTY FOR PRIVATE USE TO AVOID PAYMENT OF POSTAGE, $300 (GPO)

Name .....

Street .....

City, Zone No., and State .....

VOTER REGISTRATION IN THE SOUTH

SUMMER, 1966

VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

The figures presented herein were accumulated during the summer and late summer of 1966. While they do not represent the final registration figures for the November elections, the difference is not expected to be large. The figures were compiled from a variety of sources---public and private, official and unofficial.

For four states---Arkansas, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia---complete or near-complete county-by-county figures showing white and Negro registration were not available. For these four states, statewide estimates have been made, based on the best information obtainable.

For two states---Florida and Mississippi---figures did not indicate the race of a sizeable number of registrants. These have been divided between the white and Negro columns on the basis of VEP estimates.

Voter Education Project
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Vernon E. Jordan, Jr.
Director

Marvin Wall
Director of Research

NEGRO-WHITE VOTER REGISTRATION IN THE SOUTH

SUMMER, 1966

STATE	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Alabama*	1,353,058	481,320	1,192,075	246,396	88.1	51.2
Arkansas	850,643	192,626	598,000	115,000	70.3	59.7
Florida	2,617,438	470,261	2,093,274	286,446	80.0	60.9
Georgia	1,797,062	612,910	1,378,005	289,545	76.7	47.2
Louisiana	1,289,216	514,589	1,071,573	242,130	83.1	47.1
Mississippi	748,266	422,256	470,920	139,099	62.9	32.9
North Carolina	2,005,955	550,929	1,653,796	281,134	82.4	51.0
South Carolina	895,147	371,104	718,061	190,609	80.2	51.4
Tennessee	1,779,018	313,873	1,375,000	225,000	77.3	71.7
Texas	4,884,765	649,512	2,600,000	400,000	53.3	61.6
Virginia	1,876,167	436,720	1,159,000	205,000	61.8	46.9
TOTALS	20,096,735	5,016,100	14,309,704	2,620,359	70.2	52.2

*Even division of 10,000 voters not registered by race.

Two-thirds and one-third Negro-white division of 14,000 voters not registered by race.

A later Mississippi figure put white registration at approximately 481,000 and Negro registration at 163,000. The October figure for Florida pushed white registration to 2,160,587 and Negro registration to 303,245.

A L A B A M A

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Autauga	6,353	3,651	6,932	2,308	100+	63.2
Baldwin	22,236	4,527	19,692	1,242	88.6	27.4
Barbour	7,338	5,787	9,825	3,666	100+	63.3
Bibb	5,807	1,190	8,087	933	100+	78.4
Blount	14,368	378	13,709	140	95.4	37.0
Bullock	2,387	4,450	3,323	3,197	100+	71.8
Butler	8,363	4,820	7,850	1,803	93.9	37.4
Calhoun	44,739	9,036	33,472	4,404	74.8	48.7
Chambers	15,369	6,497	11,889	1,439	77.4	22.1
Cherokee	8,537	752	9,651	482	100+	61.6
Chilton	12,861	1,947	16,006	747	100+	38.4
Choctaw	5,192	3,982	5,833	3,024	100+	75.9
Clarke	7,899	5,833	10,336	2,564	100+	44.0
Clay	6,470	926	8,534	399	100+	43.1
Cleburne	5,870	385	7,493	139	100+	36.1
Coffee	14,221	2,985	11,334	1,002	79.7	33.6
Colbert	21,680	4,575	20,569	2,818	94.9	61.6
Conecuh	5,907	3,635	5,559	2,084	94.1	57.3
Coosa	4,201	1,794	5,678	956	100+	53.3
Covington	18,446	2,876	16,486	1,010	89.4	35.1

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Crenshaw	6,310	2,207	6,469	1,213	100+	55.0
Cullman	25,848	285	24,622	122	95.3	42.8
Dale	14,861	2,743	11,658	1,414	78.4	51.5
Dallas	14,400	15,115	12,787	10,513	88.8	69.6
DeKalb	23,878	441	26,680	217	100+	49.2
Elmore	12,510	4,808	15,710	2,813	100+	58.5
Escambia	12,779	5,685	15,631	1,825	100+	32.1
Etowah	48,565	7,661	41,820	4,120	86.1	53.8
Fayette	8,277	1,291	9,141	664	100+	51.4
Franklin	12,412	645	13,616	725	100+	100+
Geneva	11,357	1,606	10,321	585	90.9	36.4
Greene	1,649	5,001	2,001	3,927	100+	78.5
Hale	3,594	5,999	4,515	4,096	100+	68.3
Henry	5,165	3,168	6,629	1,459	100+	46.1
Houston	22,095	6,899	15,604	1,813	70.6	26.3
Jackson	19,298	1,175	18,526	629	96.0	53.5
Jefferson	256,319	116,160	175,087	62,992	68.3	54.2
Lamar	7,503	1,027	9,927	367	100+	35.7
Lauderdale	31,089	3,726	18,434	1,339	59.3	35.9
Lawrence	10,509	2,471	14,731	1,315	100+	53.2
Lee	17,547	8,913	13,470	2,818	76.8	31.6

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Limestone	16,173	3,579	14,272	1,278	88.2	35.7
Lowndes	1,900	5,122	2,823	2,758	100+	53.8
Macon	2,818	11,886	4,997	7,130	100+	60.0
Madison	54,516	10,666	41,333*	3,183*	75.8	29.8
Marengo	6,104	7,791	7,288	5,799	100+	74.4
Marion	12,656	403	16,418	267	100+	66.3
Marshall	26,997	637	17,174	152	63.6	23.9
Mobile	121,589	50,793	107,455*	24,794*	88.4	48.8
Monroe	6,631	4,894	7,542	2,497	100+	51.0
Montgomery	62,911	33,056	43,514	19,268	69.2	58.3
Morgan	30,955	4,159	25,741	1,194	83.2	28.7
Perry	3,441	5,202	5,495	3,847	100+	74.0
Pickens	7,336	4,373	7,407	1,717	100+	39.3
Pike	9,126	5,259	11,788	3,180	100+	60.5
Randolph	9,196	2,366	10,230	1,182	100+	50.0
Russell	13,761	10,531	12,682	3,932	92.2	37.3
St. Clair	12,244	2,035	11,044	906	90.2	44.5
Shelby	14,771	2,889	13,208*	985*	89.4	34.1
Sumter	3,061	6,814	3,775	3,392	100+	49.8
Talladega	25,635	9,333	21,389	3,406	83.4	36.5
Tallapoosa	15,310	4,999	17,807	1,818	100+	36.4
Tuscaloosa	47,076	15,332	29,049	5,707	61.7	37.2

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Walker	28,148	2,890	26,885	1,277	95.5	44.2
Washington	5,293	2,297	7,690	1,469	100+	64.0
Wilcox	2,624	6,085	3,639	3,765	100+	61.9
Winston	8,559	47	11,179	40	100+	85.1
TOTALS	1,353,058	481,320	1,187,075	241,396	87.7	50.2

*Figures do not include a total of more than 10,000 voters for whom race is not designated in Madison, Mobile, and Shelby counties.

F L O R I D A

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Alachua	30,555	9,898	24,767	6,214	81.1	62.8
Baker	3,203	807	3,445	554	100+	68.6
Bay	31,940	4,964	23,223	3,330	72.7	67.1
Bradford	5,580	1,345	4,900	893	87.8	66.4
Brevard	58,433	6,494	63,271	4,147	100+	63.9
Broward	189,517	27,009	179,977	19,713	95.0	73.0
Calhoun	3,434	582	4,091	379	100+	65.1
Charlotte	8,659	427	11,588	346	100+	81.0
Citrus	5,174	829	6,626	589	100+	71.0
Clay	9,508	1,276	9,443	1,013	99.3	79.4
Collier	8,163	1,364	8,173	623	100+	45.7
Columbia	8,092	3,122	8,676	2,517	100+	80.6
Dade	537,448	75,573	373,413	50,621	69.5	67.0
De Soto	6,339	1,343	4,564	1,010	72.0	75.2
Dixie	2,138	363	2,775	371	100+	100+
Duval	203,804	58,430	134,175	36,691	65.8	62.8
Escambia	76,688	18,041	58,651	13,058	76.5	72.4
Flagler	1,789	846	1,944	391	100+	46.2
Franklin	3,186	779	3,428	537	100+	68.9

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Gadsden	11,711	12,261	6,338	4,237	54.1	34.6
Gilchrist	1,513	154	1,737	110	100+	71.4
Glades	1,061	741	1,130	269	100+	36.3
Gulf	4,196	1,138	3,652	710	87.0	62.4
Hamilton	2,486	1,621	2,683	1,087	100+	67.0
Hardee	6,734	552	5,475	354	81.3	64.1
Hendry	3,430	1,180	3,322	756	96.8	64.1
Hernando	5,689	1,151	5,597	719	98.4	62.5
Highlands	10,997	2,251	10,587	1,547	96.3	68.7
Hillsborough	213,950	31,114	152,995	19,803	71.5	63.6
Holmes	6,131	249	6,472	199	100+	79.9
Indian River	13,182	2,637	11,713	1,376	88.9	52.2
Jackson	14,087	5,390	11,370	3,515	80.7	65.2
Jefferson	2,383	2,600	2,470	1,540	100+	59.2
Lafayette	1,536	152	1,767	102	100+	67.1
Lake	30,535	6,438	25,241	2,665	82.7	41.4
Lee	30,636	4,677	31,301	1,668	100+	35.7
Leon	28,241	12,322	25,360	7,240	89.8	58.8
Levy	4,483	1,568	3,730	536	83.2	34.2
Liberty	1,525	240	2,073	155	100+	64.6

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Madison	4,380	3,067	4,250	2,023	97.0	66.0
Manatee	42,291	5,278	35,354	3,493	83.6	66.2
Marion	21,001	9,283	22,129	6,006	100+	64.7
Martin	9,291	1,753	9,106	1,225	98.0	69.9
Monroe	25,512	2,919	16,781	2,077	65.8	71.1
Nassau	7,054	2,076	5,680	1,476	80.5	71.1
Okaloosa	30,816	2,097	23,818	1,289	77.3	61.5
Okeechobee	2,870	533	3,140	419	100+	78.6
Orange	137,780	21,771	98,598	10,344	71.6	47.5
Osceola	11,697	1,122	10,049	609	85.9	54.3
Palm Beach	119,342	29,541	104,229	17,204	87.3	58.2
Pasco	22,329	2,391	23,461	1,160	100+	48.5
Pinellas	255,369	18,121	216,174	11,155	84.6	61.6
Polk	97,314	19,224	73,713	10,045	75.7	52.2
Putnam	13,095	5,089	9,056	2,049	69.2	40.3
St. Johns	13,771	4,331	10,225	2,241	74.2	51.7
St. Lucie	17,238	6,527	14,837	3,933	86.1	60.3
Santa Rosa	14,710	1,082	13,043	740	88.7	68.4
Sarasota	49,533	4,125	42,833	2,100	86.5	50.9
Seminole	24,372	7,050	17,125	2,989	70.3	42.4

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Sumter	5,396	1,523	5,308	911	98.4	59.8
Suwannee	6,409	2,149	5,388	1,083	84.1	50.4
Taylor	5,454	1,724	5,439	939	99.7	54.5
Union	2,880	1,082	2,049	171	71.1	15.8
Volusia	74,209	11,615	63,253	6,881	85.2	59.2
Wakulla	2,120	753	2,681	602	100+	79.9
Walton	7,958	1,086	7,816	857	98.2	78.9
Washington	5,364	1,021	5,596	840	100+	82.3
TOTALS	2,617,438	470,261	2,093,274	286,446	80.0	60.9

G E O R G I A

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Appling	5,862	1,401	7,286	1,187	100+	84.7
Atkinson	2,486	812	3,202	800	100+	99.2
Bacon	4,203	536	4,535	264	100+	49.3
Baker	1,139	1,285	1,517	722	100+	56.2
Baldwin	16,109	9,235	6,555	1,871	40.7	20.3
Banks	3,850	213	3,405	63	88.4	29.6
Barrow	7,865	1,332	6,230	403	79.2	30.3
Bartow	14,942	2,373	15,594	1,417	100+	59.2
Ben Hill	5,931	2,436	3,607	977	60.8	40.1
Berrien	6,179	964	5,133	575	83.1	59.6
Bibb	60,429	26,812	27,084*	5,251*	44.8	19.6
Bleckley	4,508	1,350	3,613	172	79.8	12.5
Brantley	2,854	384	3,005	300	100+	78.1
Brooks	5,059	3,711	3,320	591	65.6	15.9
Bryan	2,289	1,111	2,335	1,165	100+	100+
Bulloch	10,101	4,337	8,528	2,196	84.4	50.6
Burke	4,358	6,600	3,835	1,595	88.0	24.2
Butts	3,195	2,099	4,101	936	100+	44.6
Calhoun	1,654	2,393	1,895	509	100+	21.3

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Camden	3,447	2,059	3,140	1,431	91.1	69.5
Candler	2,714	1,200	2,996	965	100+	86.4
Carroll	19,234	3,595	13,201	1,965	68.6	54.7
Catoosa	12,370	172	11,231	75	90.8	43.6
Charlton	2,077	810	2,539	444	100+	54.8
Chatham	78,118	37,563	54,676	21,174	70.0	56.4
Chattahoochee	8,061	1,830	462	119	5.7	6.5
Chattooga	11,460	1,025	8,983	927	78.4	90.4
Cherokee	13,964	617	13,749*	608*	98.5	100+
Clarke	23,895	6,740	13,897	4,723	58.2	70.1
Clay	1,130	1,441	968	256	85.7	17.8
Clayton	23,996	2,456	17,725	723	73.9	29.4
Clinch	2,373	1,256	2,350	371	99.0	29.5
Cobb	63,291	4,568	29,680*	1,800*	47.0	39.6
Coffee	9,682	2,977	11,224	1,304	100.+	43.8
Colquitt	13,982	4,081	12,778*	1,673*	80.0	41.0
Columbia	5,096	2,364	4,278	801	83.9	33.9
Cook	5,213	1,755	5,513	652	100+	37.2
Coweta	11,891	5,579	11,919	2,352	100+	42.2
Crawford	1,596	1,611	1,468	354	92.0	22.0
Crisp	6,451	3,858	6,301	1,805	97.7	46.8

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Dade	4,803	70	4,242	60	88.3	85.7
Dawson	2,148	1	2,373	0	100+	.0
Decatur	9,070	5,515	8,144	1,218	89.8	22.1
DeKalb	148,167	12,407	120,129	7,862	81.1	63.4
Dodge	7,392	2,328	7,013	1,871	94.9	80.4
Dooly	3,581	2,866	4,392	890	100+	31.1
Dougherty	29,897	14,163	13,715*	4,800*	45.9	33.9
Douglas	8,595	1,268	8,653	955	100+	75.3
Early	4,013	3,277	4,048	502	100+	15.3
Echols	832	246	838	19	100+	7.7
Effingham	4,008	1,756	3,974	569	99.2	32.4
Elbert	7,752	3,127	9,335	1,315	100+	42.1
Emanuel	7,627	3,005	6,318	2,098	82.8	69.8
Evans	2,738	1,308	2,355	547	86.0	41.8
Fannin	8,111	31	8,494	18	100+	58.1
Fayette	3,585	1,190	300	6	83.7	5.1
Floyd	38,230	5,949	24,932	2,600	65.2	43.7
Forsyth	7,328	4	6,539	0	89.2	.0
Franklin	7,611	776	7,599	112	99.8	14.4
Fulton	247,892	117,049	172,112	69,885	69.4	59.7
Gilmer	5,431	7	7,997	3	100+	42.8

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Glascock	1,281	351	1,487	22	100+	6.3
Glynn	18,750	6,762	8,628	2,715	46.0	40.0
Gordon	11,441	669	8,643	358	75.5	53.5
Grady	7,205	3,364	4,461	809	61.9	24.0
Greene	3,565	2,998	3,395	2,570	95.2	85.7
Gwinnett	24,299	1,841	22,633	1,515	93.1	82.3
Habersham	10,676	518	7,276	507	68.2	97.9
Hall	27,726	2,789	16,750	1,149	60.4	41.2
Hancock	1,727	3,576	1,661	1,706	96.2	47.7
Haralson	8,571	642	7,375	412	86.0	64.2
Harris	3,310	3,102	3,749	757	100+	24.4
Hart	7,382	1,832	6,481	425	87.8	23.2
Heard	2,661	590	3,067	365	100+	61.9
Henry	6,429	3,539	8,161	3,015	100+	85.2
Houston	17,742	4,228	13,390	1,976	75.5	46.7
Irwin	3,759	1,602	4,527	688	100+	42.9
Jackson	10,225	1,309	7,850	693	76.8	52.9
Jasper	1,926	1,705	2,152	735	100+	43.1
Jeff Davis	4,116	909	6,293	108	100+	11.9
Jefferson	4,937	4,780	4,524	4,306	91.6	90.1
Jenkins	2,985	2,210	2,764	652	92.6	29.5

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Johnson	3,455	1,261	3,329	555	96.4	44.0
Jones	2,655	2,185	2,695	956	100+	43.8
Lamar	4,078	2,118	3,758	1,030	92.2	48.6
Lanier	2,158	756	1,807	364	83.7	48.1
Laurens	13,176	6,248	13,490	4,195	100+	67.1
Lee	1,427	1,795	1,373	177	96.2	9.9
Liberty	5,310	3,176	2,950	2,594	55.6	81.7
Lincoln	1,974	1,336	2,500	519	100+	38.8
Long	1,527	635	2,255	1,081	100+	100+
Lowndes	20,746	8,459	13,093	2,680	63.1	31.7
Lumpkin	4,500	79	4,413	105	98.1	100+
McDuffie	4,625	2,740	8,030	931	100+	34.0
McIntosh	1,643	1,823	1,612	1,935	98.1	100+
Macon	3,171	4,077	3,514	1,644	100+	40.3
Madison	5,962	989	4,823	106	80.9	10.7
Marion	1,353	1,609	1,563	236	100+	14.7
Meriwether	6,547	4,990	5,402	1,871	82.5	37.5
Miller	3,095	946	1,594	153	51.5	16.2
Mitchell	6,055	4,971	5,592	1,242	92.4	25.0
Monroe	3,607	2,652	4,077	809	100+	30.5
Montgomery	2,520	1,288	2,449	745	97.2	57.8

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Morgan	3,415	2,469	1,667	993	48.8	40.2
Murray	6,209	51	6,210	25	100+	49.0
Muscogee	74,662	22,549	30,485	7,366	40.8	32.7
Newton	9,045	3,767	6,110	984	67.6	26.1
Oconee	3,228	681	2,554	120	79.1	17.6
Oglethorpe	2,964	1,709	2,873	328	96.9	19.2
Paulding	7,353	603	8,170	529	100+	87.7
Peach	3,650	4,562	2,930	1,011	80.3	22.2
Pickens	5,264	251	6,034	195	100+	77.7
Pierce	4,432	1,135	4,518	610	100+	53.7
Pike	2,584	1,643	2,601	669	100+	40.7
Polk	15,065	2,443	12,381	1,709	82.2	70.0
Pulaski	3,018	1,843	3,128	336	100+	18.2
Putnam	2,297	2,204	2,446	725	100+	32.9
Quitman	581	707	670	160	100+	22.6
Rabun	4,392	43	4,237	33	96.5	76.7
Randolph	2,878	3,663	2,598	867	90.3	23.7
Richmond	61,315	24,785	37,498	12,313	61.2	49.7
Rockdale	4,708	1,512	4,829	877	100+	58.0
Schley	961	903	1,142	210	100+	23.3
Screven	4,557	3,729	3,698	1,144	81.1	30.7

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Seminole	2,648	1,255	3,017	418	100+	33.3
Spalding	16,657	5,252	11,178	2,872	67.1	54.7
Stephens	9,975	1,355	9,518	743	95.4	54.8
Stewart	1,465	2,681	1,793	619	100+	23.1
Sumter	7,730	6,710	8,321	3,040	100+	45.3
Talbot	1,437	2,507	1,406	661	97.8	26.4
Taliaferro	917	1,073	1,052	1,165	100+	100+
Tattnall	7,377	3,135	6,515	2,995	88.3	95.5
Taylor	2,767	2,004	3,071	495	100+	24.7
Telfair	4,938	2,087	4,459	1,622	90.3	77.7
Terrell	3,038	4,057	3,305	449	100+	11.1
Thomas	13,179	7,644	8,697*	1,652*	66.0	21.6
Tift	10,211	3,513	7,828	1,637	76.7	46.6
Toombs	7,513	2,444	7,571	920	100+	37.6
Towns	2,942	1	2,600	0	88.3	.0
Treutlen	2,473	968	2,050	564	82.9	58.3
Troup	20,579	8,577	12,817	2,856	62.3	33.3
Turner	3,422	1,535	2,853	477	83.4	31.1
Twiggs	1,969	2,255	1,749	317	88.8	14.1
Union	3,457	1	3,500	0	88.4	.0
Upson	1,159	3,615	6,675	888	59.8	24.6
Walker	26,511	1,388	31,415	1,131	100+	81.5

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Walton	9,392	3,076	6,565	963	69.9	31.3
Ware	15,671	4,763	12,994	2,720	82.9	57.1
Warren	1,911	2,224	1,938	1,380	100+	62.1
Washington	5,373	5,451	5,367	1,672	99.9	30.7
Wayne	8,204	1,878	7,878	1,171	96.0	62.4
Webster	775	975	826	231	100+	23.7
Wheeler	2,236	824	2,172	682	97.1	82.8
White	4,047	169	4,631	230	100+	100+
Whitfield	24,437	1,085	19,767	991	80.9	91.3
Wilcox	3,309	1,282	3,840	541	100+	42.2
Wilkes	3,621	3,101	4,052	1,039	100+	33.5
Wilkinson	3,135	2,279	3,302	715	100+	31.4
Worth	6,324	3,776	6,246	823	100+	21.8
TOTALS	1,797,063	612,910	1,373,388	280,212	76.4	45.7

*Totals do not include more than 14,000 registered voters for whom race is not indicated. Most of these are in Bibb, Cobb, Dougherty and Thomas counties. A smaller number is found in Cherokee, Colquitt and several other counties.

L O U I S I A N A

Parish	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent white reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Acadia	22,399	4,557	21,651	4,118	97	90
Allen	8,357	2,310	8,303	1,981	99	86
Ascension	10,110	4,171	9,116	2,688	90	64
Assumption	5,877	3,237	5,356	1,997	91	62
Avoyelles	15,845	4,717	13,657	2,396	86	51
Beauregard	8,682	2,145	9,123	1,182	100+	55
Bienville	5,617	4,077	5,130	1,693	91	42
Bossier	23,696	6,847	15,460	1,117	65	16
Caddo	87,774	41,749	60,494	10,141	69	24
Calcasieu	62,987	14,924	49,151	9,396	78	63
Caldwell	3,843	1,161	3,944	377	100+	32
Cameron	3,642	239	3,485	195	96	82
Catahoula	4,110	1,919	4,287	798	100+	42
Claiborne	6,415	5,032	5,300	1,345	83	27
Concordia	5,963	4,582	5,928	1,350	99	30
DeSoto	6,543	6,753	5,866	2,317	90	34
E. Baton Rouge	87,985	36,908	78,497	15,715	89	43
E. Carroll	2,990	4,183	2,577	2,735	86	65
E. Feliciana	7,043	6,081	5,378	2,195	76	36
Evangeline	13,652	3,342	14,869	3,731	100+	100+
Franklin	8,954	4,433	4,584	409	51	9

Parish	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Grant	6,080	1,553	6,042	685	99	44
Iberia	20,200	7,165	18,143	4,854	90	68
Iberville	8,733	7,060	7,831	5,252	90	74
Jackson	6,607	2,535	6,274	1,486	95	59
Jefferson	98,103	14,970	92,549	9,404	94	63
Jefferson Davis	12,892	2,881	10,716	1,753	83	61
Lafayette	35,513	9,473	32,872	5,814	93	61
Lafourche	25,737	3,078	25,140	2,215	98	72
LaSalle	6,799	849	7,237	661	100+	78
Lincoln	9,611	5,723	7,480	1,835	78	32
Livingston	12,306	1,818	13,687	1,445	100+	80
Madison	3,334	5,181	2,971*	2,734*	89	53
Morehouse	10,311	7,208	8,154	1,158	79	16
Natchitoches	11,328	7,444	10,357	4,264	91	57
Orleans	257,495	125,752	162,452	52,336	63	42
Ouachita	40,185	16,377	31,044	7,596	77	46
Plaquemines	8,633	2,897	9,746	1,300	100+	45
Pointe Coupee	6,085	5,273	4,834	2,976	79	56
Rapides	44,823	18,141	33,982	6,870	76	38
Red River	3,294	2,181	3,627	969	100+	44

*Race is not indicated for 280 persons registered in Madison Parish.

Parish	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Richland	7,601	4,608	6,140	764	81	17
Sabine	8,251	2,143	9,047	1,445	100+	67
St. Bernard	15,836	1,105	18,843	705	100+	64
St. Charles	8,117	2,621	7,840	2,411	97	92
St. Helena	2,363	2,082	2,327	1,520	99	73
St. James	4,892	3,964	4,736	2,834	97	72
St. John	4,982	4,279	4,593	3,047	92	71
St. Landry	25,550	14,982	23,129	11,650	91	78
St. Martin	9,781	4,664	9,824	3,449	100+	74
St. Mary	17,991	7,176	15,986	5,179	89	72
St. Tammany	16,032	5,038	18,727	2,920	100+	58
Tangipahoa	22,311	9,401	20,654	4,323	93	46
Tensas	2,287	3,533	2,237	719	98	20
Terrebonne	24,393	5,464	19,646	1,711	81	31
Union	7,021	3,006	6,585	1,079	94	36
Vermilion	19,710	2,429	19,977	2,424	100+	100-
Vernon	9,279	1,268	10,311	751	100+	59
Washington	16,804	6,821	16,157	3,330	96	49
Webster	15,713	7,045	11,008	3,163	70	45
W. Baton Rouge	3,974	3,502	3,791	1,749	95	50

Parish	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
W. Carroll	6,171	1,389	4,516	186	73	13
W. Feliciana	2,814	4,553	1,113	1,817	39	40
Winn	6,790	2,590	7,092	1,362	100+	53
TOTALS	1,289,216	514,589	1,071,573	242,130	83.1	47.1

M I S S I S S I P P I

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Adams	10,888	9,340	6,306	6,005	57.9	64.3
Alcorn	13,347	1,756	8,603	398	64.4	22.7
Amite	4,449	3,560	3,831	949	86.1	26.7
Attala	7,522	4,262	NV	NV
Benton	2,514	1,419	2,419	956	96.2	67.4
Bolivar	10,031	15,939	6,209	5,732	61.9	36.0
Calhoun	7,188	1,767	NV	NV
Carroll	2,969	2,704	3,077	1,248	100+	46.1
Chickasaw	6,388	3,054	6,620	535	100+	17.5
Choctaw	3,728	1,105	NV	NV
Claiborne	1,688	3,969	1,679	2,906	99.4	73.2
Clarke	6,072	2,988	5,211	1,026	85.8	34.3
Clay	5,547	4,444	3,535	1,695	63.7	38.1
Coahoma	8,708	14,604	7,215	7,761	82.8	53.1
Copiah	8,153	6,407	8,382	1,455	100+	22.7
Covington	5,329	2,032	4,339	937	81.4	46.1
De Soto	5,338	6,246	5,592	2,129	100+	34.1
Forrest	22,431	7,495	14,827	2,064	66.1	27.5
Franklin	3,403	1,842	3,919	358	100+	19.4

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
George	5,276	580	4,625	123	87.7	21.2
Greene	3,518	859	3,147	264	89.4	30.7
Grenada	5,792	4,323	5,962	1,752	100+	40.5
Hancock	6,813	1,129	5,574	510	81.8	45.2
Harrison	55,094	9,670	17,450	3,833	31.7	39.6
Hinds	67,836	36,138	63,952	15,663	94.3	43.3
Holmes	4,773	8,757	5,080	4,655	100+	53.1
Humphreys	3,344	5,561	2,861	1,283	85.5	23.1
Issaquena	640	1,081	768	446	100+	41.3
Itawamba	8,523	463	6,258	66	73.4	14.2
Jackson	24,447	5,113	NV	NV
Jasper	5,327	3,675	4,643	976	87.2	26.6
Jefferson	1,666	3,540	1,913	2,049	100+	57.8
Jefferson Davis	3,629	3,222	3,443	1,833	94.8	56.8
Jones	25,943	7,427	NV	2,077(est.)		28.0
Kemper	3,113	3,221	3,342	369	100+	11.4
Lafayette	8,074	3,239	4,784	778	59.2	24.0
Lamar	6,489	1,071	6,062	174	93.4	16.2
Lauderdale	27,806	11,924	19,895	5,343	71.5	44.8
Lawrence	3,878	1,720	NV	1,074(est.)		62.4
Leake	6,754	3,397	6,358	849	94.1	24.9

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Lee	18,709	5,130	11,403	736	60.9	14.3
Leflore	10,274	13,567	NV	7,161(est.)		52.8
Lincoln	11,072	3,913	NV	NV
Lowndes	16,460	8,362	9,813	1,267	59.6	15.1
Madison	5,622	10,366	6,334	5,991	100+	57.8
Marion	8,997	3,630	10,810	1,227	100+	33.8
Marshall	4,342	7,168	4,741	2,562	100+	35.7
Monroe	13,426	5,610	NV	NV
Montgomery	4,700	2,627	4,250	591	90.4	22.5
Neshoba	9,143	2,565	6,783	953	74.2	37.1
Newton	8,014	3,018	6,198	1,127	77.3	37.3
Noxubee	2,997	5,172	NV	NV
Oktibbeha	8,423	4,952	8,443	889	100+	17.9
Panola	7,639	7,250	6,555	2,411	85.8	33.2
Pearl River	9,765	2,473	NV	NV
Perry	3,515	1,140	NV	NV
Pike	12,163	6,936	8,760	2,162	72.0	31.2
Pontotoc	8,772	1,519	6,398	261	72.9	17.2
Prentiss	9,535	1,070	6,810	112	71.4	10.5
Quitman	4,176	5,673	3,391	1,382	81.2	24.3

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Rankin	13,246	6,944	12,321	1,504	93.0	21.7
Scott	7,742	3,752	5,677	705	73.3	18.7
Sharkey	1,882	3,152	1,768	433	93.9	13.7
Simpson	8,055	3,186	NV	NV
Smith	6,597	1,293	NV	NV
Stone	2,965	868	2,473	114	83.4	13.1
Sunflower	8,785	13,524	8,287	2,325	94.3	17.1
Tallahatchie	5,099	6,483	4,913	1,174	96.3	18.1
Tate	4,506	4,326	3,980	1,429	88.3	33.0
Tippah	7,513	1,281	5,957	374	79.2	29.2
Tishomingo	8,068	359	5,248	54	65.0	15.0
Tunica	2,011	5,822	1,558	505	77.4	8.7
Union	9,512	1,626	7,033	298	73.9	18.3
Walthall	4,536	2,490	4,261	1,293	93.9	51.9
Warren	13,530	10,726	12,169	5,229	89.9	48.7
Washington	19,837	20,619	12,683	5,094	63.9	24.7
Wayne	5,881	2,556	4,838	370	82.2	14.4
Webster	4,993	1,174	NV	NV
Wilkinson	2,340	4,120	2,777	1,127	100+	27.3
Winston	6,808	3,611	NV	NV

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Yalobusha	4,572	2,441	3,511	235	76.8	9.6
Yazoo	7,598	8,719	7,580	1,050	99.7	11.9
TOTALS	748,266	422,256	470,920	139,099	62.9	32.9

Note: Race is not indicated for many recent registrants in a number of Mississippi counties. Where these figures occurred, they have been divided between the races in the totals above. Most are counted as Negro registration, since it is thought that most of these recent registrants are Negroes. NV indicates statistics not available when these figures were assembled.

NORTH CAROLINA

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Alamance	42,755	7,429	47,604	4,801	100+	64.6
Alexander	8,370	506	10,478	460	100+	90.9
Alleghany	4,588	119	6,899	83	100+	69.7
Anson	7,847	5,218	6,800	1,700	86.7	32.6
Ashe	11,276	115	13,038	110	100+	95.6
Avery	6,507	124	6,081	41	93.4	33.1
Beaufort	13,737	6,196	10,144	1,114	73.8	18.0
Bertie	6,156	6,261	5,925	3,879	96.2	61.9
Bladen	9,173	5,147	10,109	2,721	100+	52.9
Brunswick	7,602	3,170	10,298	2,588	100+	81.6
Buncombe	72,249	8,510	67,653	6,565	93.6	77.1
Burke	29,506	1,921	34,657	2,247	100+	100+
Cabarrus	35,165	5,380	31,463	2,899	89.5	53.9
Caldwell	25,520	1,723	22,486	1,938	88.1	100+
Camden	1,988	1,054	1,923	417	96.7	39.6
Carteret	16,030	1,932	12,087	1,065	75.4	55.1
Caswell	6,026	4,129	5,200	1,600	86.3	38.7
Catawba	38,542	3,296	22,068	1,557	57.3	47.2
Chatham	11,227	4,026	13,722	900	100+	22.3
Cherokee	9,102	226	9,055	152	99.5	67.3

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Chowan	3,825	2,507	3,424	822	89.5	32.8
Clay	3,112	37	2,454	25	78.9	67.6
Cleveland	30,356	6,474	19,883	2,490	65.5	38.5
Columbus	17,830	7,382	16,458	5,459	92.3	73.9
Craven	22,994	8,242	12,001	3,473	52.2	42.1
Cumberland	58,279	18,789	25,794	7,461	44.3	39.7
Currituck	2,845	1,076	2,574	378	90.5	35.1
Dare	3,467	237	NV	NV
Davidson	41,462	4,491	31,839	2,404	76.8	53.5
Davie	8,898	1,080	9,967	966	100+	89.4
Duplin	14,477	6,955	15,812	3,185	100+	45.8
Durham	47,098	19,475	37,022	16,389	78.6	84.1
Edgecombe	15,515	12,330	12,247	3,624	78.9	29.4
Forsyth	87,219	24,952	68,221	17,028	78.2	68.2
Franklin	9,842	5,554	10,642	1,853	100+	33.4
Gaston	64,154	8,365	43,288	4,185	67.5	50.0
Gates	2,714	2,344	3,061	1,289	100+	55.0
Graham	3,324	125	NV	NV
Granville	11,584	6,996	10,022	2,475	86.5	35.4
Greene	4,793	3,268	4,257	777	88.8	23.8
Guilford	116,748	27,292	84,838	16,711	72.7	61.2

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Halifax	16,496	13,766	17,529	4,821	100+	35.0
Harnett	20,061	6,150	15,326	3,799	76.4	61.8
Haywood	23,055	500	22,182	393	96.2	78.6
Henderson	21,062	1,170	17,419	651	82.7	55.6
Hertford	5,606	6,102	4,605	3,025	82.1	49.6
Hoke	3,998	3,747	2,984	1,375	74.6	36.7
Hyde	2,201	1,100	1,970	399	89.5	36.3
Iredell	31,094	5,517	23,338	2,958	75.1	53.6
Jackson	9,227	841	7,234	148	78.4	17.6
Johnston	28,259	6,395	22,188	2,550	78.5	39.9
Jones	3,248	2,251	4,508	1,571	100+	69.8
Lee	12,041	2,803	11,537	1,882	95.8	67.1
Lenoir	19,260	10,293	15,448	3,670	80.2	35.6
Lincoln	14,893	1,546	16,591	1,491	100+	96.4
McDowell	14,693	755	14,232	626	96.9	82.9
Macon	8,573	180	8,168	67	95.3	37.2
Madison	9,574	75	8,098	42	84.6	56.0
Martin	8,052	5,683	7,706	2,027	95.7	35.7
Mecklenburg	123,787	34,150	98,779	18,087	79.8	53.0
Mitchell	7,977	29	7,083	8	88.8	27.6
Montgomery	8,119	2,075	7,855	1,387	96.7	66.8

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Moore	15,733	4,803	12,821	2,136	81.5	44.5
Nash	21,761	10,573	14,837	2,655	68.2	25.1
New Hanover	31,641	10,569	22,241	6,788	70.3	64.2
Northampton	6,178	7,304	6,062	4,016	98.1	55.0
Onslow	33,988	5,015	14,995	2,694	44.1	53.7
Orange	19,385	4,978	16,619	3,265	85.8	65.6
Pamlico	3,708	1,593	3,207	807	86.5	50.7
Pasquotank	9,409	4,936	6,079	2,127	64.6	43.1
Pender	5,631	4,085	5,486	1,672	97.4	40.9
Perquimans	3,083	2,027	2,291	985	74.3	48.6
Person	9,994	4,227	9,664	2,070	96.7	49.0
Pitt	22,621	13,575	27,039	4,449	100+	32.8
Polk	6,104	766	8,408	683	100+	89.2
Randolph	33,477	2,591	23,421	1,245	70.0	48.0
Richmond	16,019	5,514	13,985	3,515	87.3	63.7
Robeson	20,851	21,424	12,904	9,401	61.9	43.9
Rockingham	33,438	7,398	26,419	4,289	79.0	58.0
Rowan	42,866	7,209	32,219	4,332	75.2	60.0
Rutherford	24,020	2,572	23,986	1,515	99.9	58.9
Sampson	17,378	8,203	22,491	7,510	100+	91.5
Scotland	7,812	4,686	4,913	1,644	62.9	35.1

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Stanly	22,056	2,164	19,136	1,322	86.8	61.1
Stokes	11,786	1,025	7,500	1,500	63.6	100+
Surry	26,796	1,423	37,075	955	100+	67.1
Swain	3,878	756	6,547	81	100+	10.7
Transylvania	8,687	405	8,509	398	97.9	98.3
Tyrrell	1,597	849	1,089	422	68.2	49.7
Union	20,044	4,423	13,209	1,428	65.9	32.3
Vance	11,005	6,520	8,145	2,507	74.0	38.4
Wake	76,799	22,856	62,912	12,022	81.9	52.6
Warren	4,439	5,490	5,207	2,562	100+	46.7
Washington	4,365	2,643	3,855	1,308	88.3	49.5
Watauga	9,639	126	10,927	94	100+	74.6
Wayne	29,349	15,754	17,527	4,939	59.7	31.3
Wilkes	23,779	1,444	24,440	1,826	100+	100+
Wilson	20,566	10,770	12,503	3,096	60.8	28.7
Yadkin	13,039	576	NV	NV
Yancey	7,856	76	8,917	68	100+	89.5
TOTALS	2,005,955	550,929	1,653,796	281,134	82.4	51.0

NOTE: Non-white figures include Indians, but these are not a major portion of the statewide total. NV indicates statistics not available at the time the figures were assembled.

S O U T H C A R O L I N A

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Abbeville	8,733	3,215	7,113	1,099	81.4	34.2
Aiken	33,646	10,040	32,958	8,585	97.9	85.5
Allendale	2,531	3,205	3,018	1,626	100+	50.8
Anderson	47,542	9,598	31,718	2,924	66.7	30.5
Bamberg	4,371	3,807	4,485	1,407	100+	37.0
Barnwell	5,652	3,242	7,029	1,759	100+	54.3
Beaufort	12,098	7,247	6,378	3,999	52.7	55.2
Berkeley	10,122	7,619	10,649	4,717	100+	61.9
Calhoun	2,623	3,318	2,663	1,621	100+	48.9
Charleston	77,909	35,499	52,815	17,422	67.7	49.1
Cherokee	16,037	3,360	14,824	1,757	92.4	52.3
Chester	11,172	5,664	11,123	2,558	99.6	45.2
Chesterfield	12,099	5,219	10,597	3,965	87.6	76.0
Clarendon	5,223	7,735	5,436	5,339	100+	69.0
Colleton	8,203	6,180	8,527	2,705	100+	43.8
Darlington	16,706	9,900	14,940	4,364	89.4	44.1
Dillon	8,725	5,529	7,593	2,840	87.0	51.4
Dorchester	7,121	5,370	8,624	3,941	100+	73.3

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Edgefield	4,103	3,764	4,128	1,022	100+	27.2
Fairfield	4,975	5,536	4,894	2,227	98.4	40.2
Florence	27,047	15,951	24,770	7,759	91.6	48.6
Georgetown	8,855	7,173	8,418	4,189	95.1	58.4
Greenville	102,365	18,605	67,538	8,700	66.0	46.8
Greenwood	19,218	6,764	15,977	2,914	83.1	43.1
Hampton	4,711	4,052	4,889	2,355	100+	58.1
Horry	27,518	7,429	20,132	2,889	73.2	38.9
Jasper	2,689	3,333	2,879	2,079	100+	62.4
Kershaw	11,258	5,903	11,434	3,034	100+	51.4
Lancaster	16,213	4,762	17,465	1,944	100+	40.8
Laurens	19,775	6,818	11,149	6,222	56.4	91.3
Lee	4,394	5,446	4,616	2,564	100+	47.1
Lexington	28,774	4,782	25,002	2,519	86.9	52.7
McCormick	1,915	2,248	2,153	972	100+	43.2
Marion	8,103	7,684	7,204	3,047	88.9	39.7
Marlboro	8,230	5,932	8,462	1,514	100+	25.5
Newberry	12,204	4,954	10,833	1,884	88.8	38.0
Oconee	19,762	2,230	13,761	1,226	69.6	54.9
Orangeburg	16,381	17,355	16,039	8,397	97.9	48.4

County	White Voting-age pop.	Negro Voting-age pop.	White reg.	Negro reg.	Per Cent White reg.	Per Cent Negro reg.
Pickens	24,015	2,356	17,339	1,077	72.2	46.1
Richland	79,050	32,670	55,509	19,265	70.2	59.0
Saluda	5,573	2,327	5,583	1,104	100+	47.4
Spartanburg	73,317	17,047	58,200	7,782	79.4	45.7
Sumter	22,004	15,380	13,849	9,238	63.0	60.1
Union	12,826	4,125	12,969	1,715	100+	41.6
Williamsburg	7,560	10,535	9,285	5,810	100+	55.1
York	31,799	10,196	23,094	4,516	72.6	44.3
TOTALS	895,147	371,104	718,061	190,609	80.2	51.4

7- 1966

To what extent do federal examiners influence the level of Negro voter registration in the Southern counties to which they are assigned? What is the effect of organized registration campaigns, particularly those assisted by the Voter Education Project?

A study by the Voter Education Project seeks to answer these questions. Registration figures were compared for counties with federal examiners, with VEP programs, with both and with neither.

The results follow a predictable pattern. Highest Negro registration figures are found in those counties with both federal examiners and VEP-assisted programs. Next comes counties with federal examiners, followed by counties with VEP programs. Lowest registration levels are found in those counties with neither.

As of late June, federal examiners had been assigned in 41 counties in four states. They had registered a total of 122,905 persons. No federal examiners have been assigned in Georgia or Virginia or in 26 North Carolina counties which come under provisions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

At the time of the comparisons, there were only two counties in South Carolina with federal examiners and only two in Mississippi with VEP-affiliated programs. Mississippi counties with neither were selected at random from various sections of the state. Alabama and South Carolina counties were chosen from the area immediately surrounding counties with federal examiners and VEP programs.

Urban counties were excluded because these counties generally have long-standing registration programs and other special histories which set them apart from rural counties. Louisiana was not included for lack of recent and adequate parish-by-parish registration figures. Federal examiners have been assigned to five Louisiana parishes.

Georgia furnishes a state example of low Negro registration where no federal examiners are present. Georgia's Negro registration is second lowest at 43.1 per cent of the Negro voting age population. In the adjoining states of Alabama and South Carolina, the figures are 48.9 per cent and 50.3 per cent respectively. Mississippi has the lowest Negro registration: 30.9 per cent of the voting age population.

The Voter Education Project assists, through small grants, programs of registration, citizenship education and leadership training in 11 Southern states. For further information about the attached tables, contact Marvin Wall, research director, Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth Street, N. W., Atlanta, Georgia 30303, (Area Code 404, 577-2986).

ALABAMA

BOTH	Negro Registration	Voting Age Population	Per Cent Registered
Hale	3,940	5,999
Perry	3,719	5,202
Marengo	5,535	7,791
	13,194	18,992	69.5
FEDERAL EXAMINERS
Greene	3,801	5,001
Wilcox	3,932	6,085
Lowndes	2,353	5,122
Dallas	10,260	15,115
Elmore	2,717	4,808
Autauga	2,275	3,651
	25,338	39,782	63.7
VEP
Sumter	3,369	6,814
Choctaw	2,971	3,982
Conecuh	1,822	3,635
Barbour	3,487	5,787
	11,649	20,218	57.6

NEITHER

Clarke	2,495	5,833
Monroe	2,380	4,894
Butler	1,731	4,820
Pike	3,015	5,259
Bullock	2,980	4,450
Russell	3,901	10,531
Washington	1,403	2,297
Crenshaw	1,210	2,207
Escambia	1,755	5,685
	20,870	45,976	45.4

MISSISSIPPI

	Negro Registration	Voting Age Population	Per Cent Registered
BOTH
Coahoma	7,553	14,604	51.7
FEDERAL EXAMINERS
Leflore	6,868	13,567
Neshoba	904	2,565
Jones	2,568	7,427
Jefferson	3,038	3,540
Claiborne	1,937	3,969
Holmes	4,891	8,757
Carroll	1,036	2,704
DeSoto	1,825	6,246
Madison	5,871	10,366
Jeff Davis	1,843	3,222
Benton	942	1,419
Clay	1,624	4,444
Humphreys	787	5,561
Walthall	1,328	4,540
Newton	1,075	3,018
Simpson	882	3,186
Warren	5.116	10,726

	Negro Registration	Voting Age Population	Per Cent Registered
Jasper	721	3,675
Noxubee	1,461	5,172
Rankin	1,503	6,944
Winston	1,003	3,611
	47,223	114,659	41.2
VEP PROGRAM
Issaquena	377	1,081	34.9
NEITHER
Lincoln	392	3,913
Panola	2,186	7,250
Sunflower	2,059	13,524
Attala	866	4,262
Amite	847	3,560
Alcorn	139	1,756
Franklin	338	1,842
Sharkey	398	3,152
Washington	4,811	20,619
Pontotoc	243	1,519
Choctaw	159	1,105
Harrison	3,482	9,670
Lauderdale	5,306	11,924

Lowndes	1,260	8,362
Pike	2,090	6,936
Tunica	468	5,822
Wilkinson	597	4,120
Adams	5,829	9,340
Montgomery	67	2,627
George	115	580
Yazoo	1,051	8,719
Lee	709	5,130
Stone	101	868
Scott	664	3,752
Lafayette	775	3,239
Quitman	1,238	5,673
	36,190	149,264	24.2

SOUTH CAROLINA

	Negro Registration	Voting Age Population	Per Cent Registered
BOTH
Clarendon	5,182	7,735	67.0
FEDERAL EXAMINER
Dorchester	3,836	5,370	71.4
VEP
Williamsburg	5,356	10,535
Sumter	7,791	15,380
Beaufort	3,963	7,247
	17,110	33,162	51.6
NEITHER
Georgetown	4,119	7,173
Orangeburg	8,289	17,355
Bamberg	1,332	3,807
Barnwell	1,759	3,242
Lee	2,554	5,446
	18,053	37,023	48.8

of these three men serves notice that he has not changed his mind. The system, it will be recalled, would draft all able-bodied young men in their 18th year, put them through basic training for six months at $30 a month, then give them six months of special training, and thereafter return them to civilian life as trained reservists, in which status they would remain, subject to automatic call in the event of a national emergency, until they were 26. The big argument that will be made for UMT is that under the present system many young men who had previously served as soldiers overseas were forced to don the uniform and fight once more in Korea, whereas many younger men who contrived the right sequence of deferments for education, marriage and employment escaped service altogether. The big argument against UMT is the danger of militarism inherent in it by reason of its universality and its permanence. Granted that such a system may be more equitable than Selective Service, something more than equality of sacrifice is required; namely, that our system also do as much as any manpower system can to minimize the danger of war. We doubt whether President Eisenhower desires to leave behind him as the most lasting monument of his administration a system of permanent conscription.

School Man Fired as 'Controversial'

BY A VOTE of four to three, the Houston board of education has discharged George W. Ebey, assistant superintendent of schools in this city of 600,000. Dr. Ebey was first charged with disloyalty, and when these accusations were proved false he was fired for being a "controversial figure," and because he did not "attack the Communists." The prime movers behind this job of character lynching did not have the courage to make their names known during the three months that the case set Houston in turmoil, and have not yet disclosed their identities. They operated through John P. Rogge, an attorney, who pressed the charges before the school board and in the newspapers. As if on signal, the "Minute Women" and others whose interest in education is wholly political, supported Mr. Rogge with outcries for Dr. Ebey's discharge. After hearing Rogge and Ebey the board employed some former FBI agents, the "General Research Company," to sift the charges and report on the truth concerning Dr. Ebey's loyalty. At a cost to Houston of nearly $6,000, General Research last week turned in a 348-page report. It followed Dr. Ebey's career through his life in California, Hawaii and Oregon; into and out of honorable military service; into and out of the American Veterans Committee. They did not find a single person who thought that Dr. Ebey was disloyal, that he had ever been a Communist, that he was anything but what he professed—an American citizen whose politics generally coincided with the New Deal. On the basis of this report the superintendent of schools recommended continued employment of Dr. Ebey. Although the original charges had been disproved, the board fired the assistant superintendent anyway. Meanwhile a transformation took place in public opinion. People who had been on the fence came down—on Dr. Ebey's side. The school board minority said: "We have just begun to fight." This minority would be greatly helped if the National Education Association were to issue the kind of report on Houston it issued on the Chicago schools a few years ago. The situations are comparable: the educational system of a great city caught in the grip of a conscienceless machine. Machine control of Chicago schools was broken by the N.E.A. report. The Houston machine should also be exposed.

Bishop Oxnam's Challenge

[EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

Washington, D.C., July 22.

FROM EARLY afternoon until midnight yesterday, one of the most courageous of American churchmen voluntarily confronted the House committee on un-American activities. Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam called on the committee to repent of "practices that jeopardize the rights of free men won after a thousand years of struggle for political and religious freedom." He sought redress for damage done him over a period of nearly seven years by the committee's practice of releasing material "much of which is irrelevant and immaterial, some of which is false and some of which is true, but all prepared in a way capable of creating the impression that I have been and am sympathetic to communism and therefore subversive." And he demanded, respectfully but firmly, that Representative Donald L. Jackson, Republican and Congregational Christian from California, apologize on the floor of the House of Representatives for saying there on March 17, 1953, that Bishop Oxnam had "served God on Sunday and the Communist front for the balance of the week over . . . a long period of time."

Bishop Oxnam was not given the apology due him. The House committee treated him with gingerly courtesy, but it showed no sign of repenting, of cleaning up its files or of changing its ways. The most it would do was to vote unanimously at the end of the day that Bishop Oxnam is not affiliated with the Communist party. It then divided on strict party lines, five Republicans to four Democrats, on the question whether he had given aid and comfort to communism through association with Communist-front organizations. But the issues raised yesterday were not settled by such actions.

I

Both sides were keenly aware that the eyes and ears of the nation were following what was being said and done in the crowded caucus room of the older of the two House office buildings. Bishop Oxnam had spent weeks in studying the correspondence, the writing, the engagement lists, the addresses of a busy lifetime. The cross-examination yesterday revealed that the committee had also gone to extraordinary lengths, including the recent taking of secret testimony from witnesses not previously called before it, to prepare for its encounter with the bishop. It had its own ways of knowing of the great concern with which citizens everywhere, and particularly churchmen, viewed the approach of the hearing. All media of mass communication sought and got facilities for covering the meeting. A rising volume of mail, incessant ringing of the telephone and a swelling number of callers drove the large staff of the House committee to the limit of endurance. As one of its minor problems, I can testify both as to the pressure on the staff and the courtesy with which it carried out its work.

An hour before the hearing was due to open, capitol police were having a hard time holding back the crowd which sought admission. The room was packed long before the gavel fell. In the front row were representatives of the American Council of Churches, whose leaders got 100,000 signatures to a petition that Congress investigate the clergy. They could have secured front seats only by the special favor of somebody connected with the committee. Before the meeting opened and during recesses, one of these men, a "Captain" Bundy, busily circulated at the front of the room talking with persons he seemed to know on the staff of the House committee. Eight or ten rows to the rear sat Samuel McCrea Cavert, general secretary of the National Council of Churches, Francis S. Harmon, chairman of its budget committee, and two or three other persons connected with the National Council as officers or staff. None of them engaged in lobbying.

The meeting was finally called to order by Representative Harold Velde, an Illinois Republican and a Methodist. He said Bishop Oxnam was being heard at his own request because he claimed he had been "in some way harmed" by the committee. The chairman said the hearing was not to be interpreted as representing an intention on the part of the committee to investigate religion or the churches. He warned that the committee would tolerate "no personalities," that it was concerned solely with the accuracy of the information in its files and not with factional disputes between church groups. He said he would tolerate no demonstrations from the crowd in support of or opposition to any person or statement.

Bishop Oxnam was then sworn and took the witness chair. As a special favor he was permitted to have sit next to him Charles P. Parlin, a New York attorney. Mr. Parlin did not speak, presumably because he was not permitted to do so, although the counsel for the House committee, Robert Kunzig, held the floor for long periods as he conducted the interrogation of Bishop Oxnam. The second concession made by the chairman to the bishop was to give him 15 minutes to read an opening statement. This he announced constituted no precedent.

II

Bishop Oxnam's statement declared in its first sentence that he sought "redress for damage done me by the release of information in the 'files' of this committee." He said that such releases, made by the committee during the last seven years, had been used by "private agencies" as evidence of Communist sympathies. Even a member of the House committee on un-American activities, he said, had been so deceived by them. He then quoted the March 17 speech of "a member of this committee" who accused him of "serving God on Sunday and the Communist front for the balance of the week" and said if that committee member could be misled, others could be more easily deceived. The bishop then spelled out his creed, which makes him reject communism: he believes in God, whereas communism is atheist; he believes in Christ and a spiritual view of life, whereas communism rejects Christ and is based on a philosophy of materialism; he is for freedom, and communism for dictatorship. He said: "I have been actively opposed to communism all my life. I have never been a member of the Communist party." He cited his entire record as proof of his desire "to make the free society impregnable to communist attack," and declared: "Loyalty to my family, my church and my country is fundamental to me; and when any man or any committee questions that loyalty, I doubt that I would be worthy of the name American if I took it lying down."

III

Bishop Oxnam then denounced the House committee's practice "of releasing unverified and unevaluated material designated as 'information' to citizens, organizations and members of Congress," and formally requested the committee to stop the practice, clean up its files and admit its inaccuracies and misrepresentations. He said the reports released "are the result of inexcusable incompetence or of slanted selection," and that they bring loyalty into question, damage reputation and "turn attention from the Communist conspirator, who pursues his nefarious work in the shadows, [to the] patriotic citizen who is disgraced in public." The bishop then asked the committee to question him about seven false statements made in material released by the House committee.

Referring to a claim by Representative Jackson that "all" pertinent information relative to an individual appears in the files, the bishop asked why his own file contained only derogatory information, with no reference to ten high honors, which he named, that had come to him as a citizen and as a churchman. "We cannot beat down the communist menace by bearing false witness against fellow Americans. The Communist wants a divided America," he said. "I believe this committee will wish to end a practice that plays into Communist hands." He then called on the committee to reform its procedure (1) by abolishing the "public" files, (2) by correcting its file on Bishop Oxnam so as to make it tell the truth, and (3) by publicly announcing its "mistakes" in his case. Further, he asked that Representative Jackson apologize on the floor of the House of Representatives for "his unprecedented and untrue statements made there concerning me." Oxnam ended by stating his belief that "the churches have done and are doing far more to destroy the Communist threat to faith and to freedom than all investigating committees put together."

Chairman Velde immediately objected to Bishop Oxnam's reference to Jackson as a violation of the rules, but Jackson said he made no protest, so the matter was dropped. This was the first of a series of rulings made by the chair against the bishop. The most spectacular of these came during the cross-examination of the bishop for his membership in the Massachusetts Council of American-Soviet Friendship, a wartime association. The bishop pointed out that his membership ended in 1943, and produced a carbon copy of his letter of resignation. He said others, from Secretary Hull down, were members; that Russia was our ally. He then attempted to read a commendation of the organization, written in November 1945, by President—then General—Dwight D. Eisenhower. The chairman interrupted him by ruling that he was out of order, but protests from members of his committee as well as a spontaneous chorus of exclamations from the audience made Mr. Velde quickly reverse his ruling.

Bishop Oxnam was asked to name the man who invited him to join this organization and he named a mathematics professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In response to questions the bishop said he did not know the professor, but had his secretary verify his status on the M.I.T. faculty, whereupon Oxnam took it for granted the man was trustworthy. Committee counsel then pointed out that the mathematics professor had been "identified" as a Communist by three men on three occasions since 1951 and that the Massachusetts organization or its national body had been cited as subversive by various bodies, including the House committee on un-American activities, at various times since 1944. Bishop Oxnam said he had observed nothing subversive about either the professor or the organization during the time he knew them. Representative Kit Clardy, Republican and Methodist of Michigan, took this opportunity and several others of similar character during the day and evening to make this an argument for the usefulness of the House committee on un-American Activities: it could detect Communists where well meaning citizens on "sucker lists" saw nothing amiss.

IV

As the hearing wore on throughout the afternoon and evening, it became clear that Bishop Oxnam's effort to persuade the committee to correct its record was meeting with little success. He had asked to be interrogated on seven points in which the "public" file on him, as published in the Washington Post, had erred. Instead the committee counsel, taking a leaf from the book of Senator McCarthy, began to insert in the record new charges based on testimony the bishop had no means of knowing about. Bishop Oxnam protested against adding to the record instead of clearing it, but got nowhere. Fortunately he had providently brought heavy brief cases full of pertinent material from his own files. In this way he was able to answer, usually with documentation, even the charges he did not anticipate concerning a variety of allegedly dubious relationships. One of the questions went back to 1922, when the present bishop was a young pastor in Los Angeles and a candidate for the board of education. In every case the bishop was able to show that he was not a member of any organization when it was declared to be subversive or when it acted in a subversive manner.

But the committee also knew it was on trial, and it acted to justify its existence by the employment of several devices. One was to enter into its record items which were shown to Bishop Oxnam and his counsel only when they demanded to see them, and of which, it was clear, members of the committee itself were often ignorant. Thus the wave of accusations always raced ahead of any possible disproof. Another device was to insert into the record on each organization or section of the interrogation a final item. It summarized all accusations against the organization without mentioning such relevant material as that the bishop, for example, had denied ever having anything to do with the organization or any knowledge of it. The record therefore begins with the charge that Bishop Oxnam was a member of the American League Against War and Fascism, for example, and ends with findings of the subversive character of the organization without mentioning that the charge against the bishop was false. The bishop protested against this practice also, but to no avail.

Still another device by which the committee attempted to save face was the claim of its counsel, backed by comments from Representatives Clardy or Jackson, that findings of subversion were "retroactive"—in spite of the constitutional provision against ex post facto operation of laws in the United States. Finally, the repeatedly demonstrated hostility of the chairman to Bishop Oxnam tended to impute guilt where it did not exist. In addition to the instances referred to, he accused the bishop of dragging religious controversy into the hearing when the bishop tried to reply to a quotation by the committee's own counsel from Louis Budenz. When Representative Clardy protested on the floor of the House that the bishop had "continually attacked all investigating committees, including this one," and was criticized in turn by the bishop, Chairman Velde ruled a reply by Bishop Oxnam out of order, saying he regretted "very much that the bishop had brought personalities into this discussion in the first place."

As the grueling interrogation ground on into the night, it became evident that Bishop Oxnam's physical endurance, intellectual stamina and spiritual self-control were not going to crack. Then the division in the House committee, which ran straight through on party lines, began to show up more clearly. Increasingly the questions which helped the bishop to bring out his side of the case came from the Democratic side of the long committee table, and those which were intended to defeat the stated purpose of the hearing came from the Republican majority. This raised the question whether it was not time for Republican policy strategists to reconsider the role of Chairman Velde and his colleagues on the House committee. What kind of position is the party which a majority of the Protestants of America support getting itself into with this kind of inquisition of a Protestant leader?

V

A second question is even more revealing of the true nature of the processes that find expression through the kind of charges that are brought against Bishop Oxnam, which even though unsupported by fair examination of the evidence are damaging through endless repetition. That is the question of the only partly concealed link between some members—possibly a majority—of the committee and the irresponsibles of the American Council of Churches. The quickness with which Chairman Velde suppressed the one mention of the American Council of Churches when it came up in the interrogation indicates that he realizes something at least of its character. Yet how did its representatives rate a front-row position at the most crowded hearing held in Washington in many a day? How did it happen that the American Council rushed its petitions to investigate the clergy to Washington? Is it coincidence that the organs of the American Council seem to be fed by hidden springs from the House committee's proceedings? And why did a member of the American Council group yesterday tell a questioner who sought to learn the identity of the group: "We are all from Congressman Jackson's office"?

H.E.F.

DOROTHY DANDRIDGE, 1954

ETH TAYLOR, 1953

7 3-60

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, SUNDAY, J

Herald Tribune—UPI telephoto

AMERICAN BEAUTIES—Eight of the nation's fifty-one entries seeking the Miss U. S. A. crown as they arrived at Miami Beach airport. The winner will be the U. S. entry in the Miss Universe pageant. Left to right: Sandy Chudy, New Jersey; Mary Rodites, New York; Evelyn Bly, Alaska; Lorelei Sue White, Rhode Island; Joan Cresleigh, New Hampshire; Terry Trip, Maine; Barbara Feldman, Massachusetts, and Joyce Trautwig, Connecticut.

Associated Press wirephoto

Corrine Huff, Miss Ohio, taking off yesterday for Miami Beach.

'Very Beautiful'

Ohio Girl Is 1st U. S. Negro To Vie for Miss Universe

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, July 2 (UPI).—Miss Corrine Huff, a Negro, was named "Miss Ohio" last night and flew to Miami Beach today for a crack at the Miss Universe title.

"To my knowledge, she is the first Negro ever to win a 'Miss State' designation," the local sponsor of the Miss Ohio contest said.

Miss Huff will compete in the eight-day pageant, starting today, for the Miss U. S. A. title and the opportunity to enter the Miss Universe contest. She was the runner-up in the Miss Ohio contest, conducted here June 26 and 27.

Winner Too Young

She received the title last night after the winner found out she was too young to compete and withdrew. Miss Huff, a Youngstown telephone operator, replaced Kathy Justice, who will not be eighteen until October.

Miss Justice flew to Miami Beach to enter the Miss U. S. A. contest. There she learned she was too young to qualify. She telephoned her parents at Poland, Ohio. Near here, and told htemfi They withdrew her from the contest. Jim Gardner, a local realtor and sponsor of the Miss Ohio competition, then announced that Miss Huff would replace Miss Justice.

Miss Huff, nineteen, who lives here with her aunt and uncle, who is an attorney, was named runner-up by the contest's five judges—a state Senator, a municipal judge, a fashion model, a radio announcer, a television personality and a cosmetologist.

Mr. Gardner said Miss Huff is "a very beautiful girl."

The contestants in the Miss Universe contest are chosen on a basis of beauty, poise and personality.

TWENTY [illegible] CENTS

AUGUST 29, 1960

TIME

THE WEEKLY NEWSMAGAZINE

THE OLYMPICS

U.S. DECATHLON STAR
RAFER JOHNSON

PHIL BATH

COL C C EARLY 072
231 PCHTRE BTL AV NW
ATLANTA 5 GA
06100 05 0503 0231

$7.[illegible] A YEAR

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

VOL. LXXVI NO. 9

"To Do a Little Better"

(See Cover)

All roads led to Rome. Day after day, the swarm of tourists dumfounded white-coated policemen with questions in a dozen languages. In the Olympic Village, the world's finest athletes relaxed in new dormitories that even provided outsize beds (called "De Gaulles") for the long-legged likes of U.S. basketball players. Through the streets roamed husky, black-jacketed South Africans, slim Burmese in sandals and red sweat suits, and Russians handing out bronze pins engraved with space Luniks. Long after midnight, officials found a Liberian marathoner, stop watch in hand, patiently plodding mile after mile. "It's quiet now," he explained, "and cool." In their practice sessions, tough Pakistanis played the American schoolgirl sport of field hockey with startling violence. Hungarians struck sparks with their shining sabers, bull-necked Turkish and Iranian wrestlers charged and grunted like affronted rhinos.

All this was prelude to the moment this week when Rome sends 6,200 bewildered pigeons fluttering into the sky, touches a flame to the traditional torch and opens the 1960 Olympic Games. By any standard, the games look to be the greatest in history. To see a record number of 7,000 athletes from a record number of 85 countries, spectators spent a record $3,200,000 for tickets before the first event was held. Among the athletes were scores of strong-willed and strong-muscled individualists, men and women with the zeal to toil through tedious years of training and the control to reach their peak in the brief, intense flurry of competition. Even in such a high-caliber group, a dignified U.S. Negro named Rafer Johnson stood out.

By character as well as by prowess, Rafer Johnson, 25, comes close indeed to fulfilling the ancient Olympic ideals of the dedicated, all-around athlete. His event is the ten-part (see cuts) decathlon—a whole track meet in miniature—which combines the classic demands of speed, stamina, strength and spirit. At 6 ft. 3 in., 196 lbs., Johnson seems to have been molded especially for the decathlon. He has the slim, knobby-kneed legs of a sprinter. But above his trim, 35-in. waist, he is built like a weight man, with a torso that mushrooms to a 46-in. chest, and shoulders that are thick with slabs of muscle.

"He Is Gentle." Even more important, Johnson has shown a monastic dedication to sport that would please the most spiritual of Olympic enthusiasts. He has shrugged off crippling injuries. In competition he has cheered on his most dangerous opponents. Says the Rev. Louis Evans, pastor of Los Angeles' Bel Air Presbyterian Church: "This is a most remarkable human being. He is as gentle as a child, and yet he is tremendously competitive."

This summer Johnson scored 8,683 points* in the decathlon to break by 326 points the world record of Russia's Vasily Kuznetsov, 28. In the eyes of many coaches of many sports, this qualifies Johnson as the finest athlete in the world. Johnson remains unsatisfied. "Rafer has always seen his objectives with almost frightening clarity," says a friend. The present objective—amounting almost to an obsession—of Decathlon Star Rafer Johnson is to win a gold medal in Rome.

* In the decathlon, each competitor's performance in each of the ten events is measured against a formidable 78-page book of tables.

SOVFOTO

DECATHLON 100-METER: Johnson (10.5) Yang (10.6), Kuznetsov (10.7)

"He's a Gentleman." Rafer Johnson's struggle to win a gold medal in the two-day event next week in many ways reflects the keenness of competition at the 1960 Olympics. It is the challenge of his career. He knows his top foes all too well. One of them, Formosa's Yang Chuan-kwang, 27, is a fellow student at U.C.L.A., has shared Johnson's workouts for the past two years. Lean and limber as bamboo, Yang is improving with impressive speed. And Johnson's duel with Russia's Kuznetsov dates back to the Melbourne Olympics in 1956, when Johnson finished second and Kuznetsov third to New Jersey's Milt Campbell. In 1958, Johnson defeated Kuznetsov in Moscow in the dramatic U.S.-U.S.S.R. track meet. Twice, Kuznetsov has taken away Johnson's world record; twice, Johnson has won it back. Says Johnson: "I know Kuznetsov well enough to know three things about him. He's a fine athlete. He's a gentleman. And he's a competitor."

400-METER RUN: Johnson (47.9) Yang (48.0), Kuznetsov (48.6)

ASSOCIATED PRESS

110-METER HIGH HURDLES: Yang (14.1) Johnson (14.2), Kuznetsov (14.4)

SOVFOTO

DISCUS: Johnson (170' 6½") Kuznetsov (165' 9"), Yang (138' 5½")

PHIL BATH

BROAD JUMP: Yang (25' 5")
Johnson (24' 9¼"), Kuznetsov (24' 7")

UPI

SHOTPUT: Johnson (52')
Kuznetsov (50' 9½"), Yang (46' 7¾")

HIGH JUMP: Yang (6' 4¾")
Johnson (6' 3"), Kuznetsov (6' 2¾")

Man to Man. The competition between Johnson, Kuznetsov and Yang will be just one of the dozens of clashes that will decide the unofficial team title in Rome. Russia, the winner in 1956, is favored again largely because of strength in such sports as weight lifting and women's track, plus a crack gymnastic team that will pick up a dozen or so gold medals, offsetting U.S. superiority in men's track. Inevitably, the scoring of the Olympics by newsmen and public as a testing of national prestige will be decried by officials. The rule book plainly states: "The Olympics are a contest between individuals." Says Avery Brundage, president of the International Olympic Committee: "When the gun is fired, each man knows he's on his own. The whole principle of the Olympics is man-to-man competition."

Man-to-man competition, most evident in the decathlon, is present throughout the Olympics. In each event, the Olympic idea and ideals are the same. Among the best athletes who will, like Johnson, be on their own when the gun fires:

¶ In the 1,500 meters—the prestige race of the Olympics—Australia's Herb Elliott, 22, will take on the world, including Ireland's Ron Delany, winner of the gold medal in 1956, and the U.S.'s fast-improving Dyrol Burleson. World record holder in the 1,500 meters (3:36) and in the mile (3:54.5), Elliott has been hampered by a bad left foot this year, and some critics claim that he is not the runner he was since getting married in May 1959. But Elliott has recently been training as of old, loping up sand dunes to strengthen his legs for what should be the finest race of the Olympics. Insists his coach, goateed Percy Cerutty: "Herb Elliott is more mature, faster, stronger and dedicated. He's faster right now than he ever was."

¶ In the 100- and 200-meter dashes, California's rangy Ray Norton, 22, will face half a dozen international stars who will need only the slightest break to beat him to the gold medals. Norton is the favorite because of his consistency under pressure and a smooth, driving stride that picks up speed as the race goes on. The long shot: West Germany's Armin Hary, 23, a Frankfurt department store clerk, who gets off the mark fast, ran the 100 meters in a world record time of 10 sec. Hary suffers from brittle nerves, and in preparation for the stress of Rome has been taking long walks in the country. In the end, Norton's chief threats will probably be his American teammates, such as Dave Sime, 24, in the 100, and Stone Johnson, 20, in the 200.

¶ In the shotput, the U.S. whales will wage a private war that will likely produce the most fascinating field event on the

PHIL BATH

POLE VAULT: Yang (14' 2½")
Kuznetsov (14' 1¼"), Johnson (13' ¼")

JAVELIN: Johnson (238' 2")
Yang (233' 2½"), Kuznetsov (222' 2½")

SOVFOTO

1,500-METER RUN: Kuznetsov (4:45.2)
Yang (4:51), Johnson (4:54.2)

program. Back for a try at his third gold medal is California's Parry O'Brien, patriarch of the herd at 28, whose best effort this year (63 ft. 5 in.) nonetheless stands a poor third to that of Arizona's 20-year-old Dallas Long (64 ft. 6½ in.) and Kansas' Bill Nieder, 26, the world record holder (65 ft. 10 in.). As the equalizer, O'Brien counts on his imposing reputation to demoralize his teammates, but Army Lieut. Nieder, who dislikes the hulking sight of his rival, says disdainfully: "O'Brien can't 'psych' me out." Top foreign challenger is Britain's Arthur Rowe, a blacksmith who shows off to fans by licking a red-hot bar, practices behind a neighborhood pub, and despite a commendable toss of 62 ft. 1 in., is expected to be completely psyched by the Americans in Rome.

¶ In the jumping events, three U.S. world record holders are expected to land on the winner's stand. High Jumper John Thomas, 19, lectures himself before each attempt ("Now, John, don't duck your head into the bar"), takes his own advice so well that no one thinks his best jump of 7 ft. 3¾ in. is his peak. Pole Vaulter Don ("Tarzan") Bragg, 25, has hauled his fullback's body (6 ft. 3 in., 197 lbs.) up 15 ft. 9¼ in. Broad Jumper Ralph Boston, 21, holds the unofficial world record of 26 ft. 11¼ in., will likely get his strongest competition from Germany's Dr. Manfred Steinbach, 27, whose best jump of 26 ft. 8½ in. was disqualified because of a tailwind.

¶ In women's track, Tennessee State's Wilma Rudolph is the star of a U.S. team that is determined to score some surprises against the strong Australians and Russians. The 17th child in a family of 19, Wilma had rheumatic fever as an infant, did not walk until she was seven, and then wore braces for a couple of years. Star pupil of Shotputter O'Brien is Earlene Brown, a 25-year-old Los Angeles housewife, who is now up to a hefty throwing weight of 225 lbs. for the shot and the discus, after slimming down to 194 lbs. to have a baby.

¶ In men's swimming, Australia's barrel-chested John Konrads, 18, will be the man to beat in the 400 and 1,500 meters. The greatest swimmer in history, Konrads drives himself six miles a day in training, gulps as many as 18 vitamin pills before a race, treats distance events as sprints and holds seven world records. But Konrads may have to swim faster than ever before to beat Teammate Murray Rose, 21, winner of both the 400 and 1,500 meters at Melbourne's 1956 Olympics, and Japan's stocky Tsuyoshi Yamanaka, 21, who has smoothed out his rough arm stroke. In the 200-meter butterfly, Indiana's bull-shouldered Mike Troy, 19, will be the surest gold-medal swimming prospect for the U.S. The world record holder (2:13.2), Troy fattens up on milkshakes and slims down with as many as three workouts a day.

¶ In women's swimming, California's 16-year-old Chris von Saltza will be the favorite in the 400 meters, the top race for the girls. Holder of the world record (4:44.5), Chris is the long and leggy (5 ft. 10 in., 140 lbs.) blonde leader of a strong U.S. team. Chris planes high and flat in the water like a surfboard, has a sea lion's endurance—and a teen-ager's superstition about a good-luck plastic frog, which she solemnly stations by her starting block before a race. Her challengers: Australia's Dawn Fraser, 22, an octogenarian by swimming standards, and the slumping, doubt-ridden Ilsa Konrads, the 16-year-old kid sister of John. World Record Holder Fraser will be the favorite in the 100 meters (her main threat: Chris von Saltza), and a dark horse in the 100-meter butterfly, thereby stands an outside chance of winning three gold medals on her own, plus a fourth for the 400-meter freestyle relay.

A Champion Apart. With so extraordinary an assemblage of great athletes concentrated in Rome, why do so many Olympic performers and coaches look upon Rafer Johnson as a champion apart? The answer lies deeper than a lifetime of phenomenal athletic performance. For the spirit of the Olympic games is more than the will to win: it is the quality of competing with honor, courage and character. Says Calvin Johnson (no kin), a long-time friend of Johnson's and a doctor now in training to be a medical missionary: "I've never met anyone like him, in medicine, the clergy, wherever. He has a profound respect for other people, and a profound humbleness."

Rafer Johnson was born to Elma and Lewis Johnson in a town named Hillsboro, south of Dallas. He was just 18 months old when his family moved to an all-Negro district of Dallas. There Rafer spent his early years in a bitter little world of segregation, discrimination and poverty. "I don't care if I never see Texas again," Johnson says, with a rare flash of anger. "There's nothing about it I like. If my family had stayed in Texas, I not only wouldn't be representing the U.S. in the Olympic Games—I wouldn't even have gone to college."

In 1945 Lewis Johnson moved his growing family of three boys and two girls to California, where he caught on as a section hand for the Southern Pacific. The family ended up in the quiet town of Kingsburg (pop. 1,500), 20 miles south of Fresno in the heart of the San Joaquin Valley. For a year, with nothing but a ragged curtain as a dividing "wall," the seven Johnsons made their home in a boxcar on a siding near a cannery.

In time they were befriended by Edward Fishel, owner of a small animal-feed processing plant, who hired Rafer's father as a handyman, his mother as a domestic, moved the family out of the boxcar and into a small house. Things went fine until the town's police chief told the Fishels to fire the Johnsons, then threatened Mrs. Johnson herself: "I don't want to see the sun set on any niggers in this town." The Fishels stood their ground, the Johnsons ignored the threats, and nothing further happened. The police chief later left the job.

"A Decathlon Man." There never was any doubt that Rafer would be an athlete. "First thing I remember about Rafer," says Benton Bowen, co-publisher of the weekly Kingsburg Recorder, "was that my daughter came telling that the principal had asked the new boy to stop hitting the baseball so hard—he was breaking all the bats."

As a high school athlete, Johnson became a legend. In football, he led Kingsburg to three league championships, as a granitic, 195-lb. left halfback averaged over 9 yds. per carry. In basketball, he averaged 17 points a game. In baseball, he hit over .400. But track was his sport—anything in track. In Johnson's junior year, Track Coach Murl Dodson drove

Horstmüller
HARY

Fred Lyon—SPORTS ILLUSTRATED
DELANY

Grey Villet—LIFE
NORTON

Jerry Cooke—SPORTS ILLUSTRATED
ELLIOTT

George Silk—LIFE
THOMAS

When that gun goes off, each man is alone and on his own.

John O'Grady—Sydney Morning Herald

AUSTRALIA'S KONRADS

U.S.'S VON SALTZA

At the grey edge of exhaustion, honor, courage and character.

him the 24 miles down to Tulare to watch Local Hero Bob Mathias compete in the event he had won as a 17-year-old in the 1948 Olympics in London and at Helsinki in 1952: the decathlon. "On the way back," says Johnson, "it struck me. I could have beaten most of the guys in that meet. That's when I decided to be a decathlon man." Only four weeks later, Johnson won California's Junior A.A.U. Decathlon Championship. In his senior year, Johnson won it again, then went off to the National A.A.U. Championship in Atlantic City. Competing against the biggest names in U.S. track, he finished a respectable third. That should have been enough to please an 18-year-old, but it did not satisfy Rafer Johnson. He hadn't won.

Triumph & Defeat. At least two dozen colleges bid for Johnson. He chose U.C.L.A. "because there was something about the atmosphere I liked." To concentrate on the decathlon, Johnson passed up college football, much to the frustration of the late coach Red Sanders, who saw in Johnson a future brilliant tailback in U.C.L.A.'s single-wing formation. Freshman Johnson improved fast enough in the decathlon to win the 1955 Pan American Games in Mexico City, celebrated by scoring 7,985 points at a welcome-home meet in Kingsburg—thereby breaking Mathias' world record by 98 points.

In 1956, Johnson won his first national championship and became the favorite to win the Olympics that November in Melbourne. Then his battered left knee, injured in high school football, began to swell. Just before the games Johnson tore a stomach muscle. It was painful even to walk, worse to run. Each jump ripped the muscle more. Johnson's two agonizing days came to a climax in the final event, the 1,500 meters. To finish second behind Milt Campbell and to stave off Kuznetsov, Johnson needed to run the best 1,500 of his career. He did. "Sure it hurt," says Johnson, "but what was I going to do? Quit? I was representing the U.S. I had to break five minutes. I could feel the Russian breathing down my neck all the way."

The Russian was still breathing down Johnson's neck in 1958 during the U.S.-U.S.S.R. track meet in Moscow. Weeks before, Kuznetsov had set a world record of 8,014 points. In one of the memorable duels in sports history, Johnson defeated Kuznetsov 8,302 v. 7,897 to regain the world record—and find himself a hero to the Russians. Johnson was kissed on the cheek by Kuznetsov, a bouquet of flowers was pressed into his huge hand, and a band of jubilant Russians later tossed him into the air in triumph. "I'd gone over there thinking we'd be abused one way or the other," says Johnson. "But they cheered the performance, not the man or the nationality." On the strength of his showing in Moscow, Rafer Johnson was named Sportsman of the Year by SPORTS ILLUSTRATED.

"Natural Leadership." Unlike many another star athlete, Johnson did not use his college as a mere mail drop and a spot to hang his spikes. At U.C.L.A., Johnson's record of campus leadership was fully as impressive as his sports achievements. He sparked the basketball team with his clutch play and rebounding. A hard worker if not a great scholar, he kept his grades at a B-minus average, switching from pre-dentistry to physical education as a junior. He was the first Negro to be pledged to the predominantly Jewish fraternity of Pi Lambda Phi. A devoutly religious member of the Swedish Mission Covenant church, he spoke constantly before church groups, was a leader of "Youth for Christ," a nondenominational national campus movement.

In his senior year, Johnson was elected student body president. On the job, Johnson worked so late that he kept waking up at his study desk at daybreak. In June 1959, shortly before graduation, Johnson climbed into the rear seat of a car driven by his brother Jim, dangled his long legs over the back of the front seat and dozed off. He was completely relaxed when a car coming from the opposite direction swerved across the road and hit the Johnson car head on. The impact jackknifed Johnson. Only his fit condition and strong body saved his back from a serious injury that would have ended all decathlon competition then and there. As it was, he suffered a severe muscular strain around the lower spine that knocked him out of another duel with Kuznetsov at the U.S.-U.S.S.R. track meet in Philadelphia in July.

Not until February of this year was Rafer Johnson able to try any real exercise. Then he spent two dreary months jogging or walking around the U.C.L.A. practice field, for up to six hours at a stretch. In April, under the anxious eye of U.C.L.A. Track Coach Ducky Drake, he tried sprint starts. But Johnson and his coach were most afraid of back-wrenching jumps. At last, in late spring, Johnson took a deep breath and started down the pole-vault runway. He cleared the bar—and plummeted into the sawdust without a twinge. Johnson was back on the track.

Johnson launched his comeback at July's National A.A.U. Championships, which also served as the Olympic trials. Though an injury as simple as a pulled muscle might have kept Johnson off the Olympic team altogether, he went all out for a special reason. Kuznetsov had captured his world record and pushed the score to 8,357 points. In the ninth event, Johnson raced smoothly across the grass and sent a silver javelin shimmering into the air. When it landed 233 ft. 3 in. away, Johnson knew he had already passed Kuznetsov's world record. In pure delight, he began sprinting after his toss. Then he suddenly stopped and knelt to pray in the middle of the field, his face wet with tears. In the final event, the 1,500 meters, Johnson increased his world record to a final total of 8,683 points.

Even that score was far from safe that July day on the University of Oregon's track field. Close behind Johnson was his old rival Yang. Though a Formosan, Yang was eligible for the A.A.U. meet, which accepts qualified foreigners. At this point, should he make a fast time in his heat of the 1,500 meters, Yang still had an outside chance of breaking Johnson's newly set world record. When Yang began to falter, Johnson's behavior was characteristic. From the sidelines he cried encouragement: "Keep going! Keep going! It's almost over!" Lifted by Johnson's cheers, Yang finished with the fine score of 8,426 points to pass Kuznetsov—but still short of Johnson's record. That night Johnson sent a telegram home: "I did it with God's help—a new world record."

A Challenge. For the past six years Johnson's life has been dominated by the decathlon. In recent months he lived for

There is a difference!

Northwestern Mutual dividends in 1960: $90 million!

DURING THE COURSE of this year, policyowners of Northwestern Mutual will share $90 million in dividends.

This is $7.5 million more than in 1959. In fact, Northwestern Mutual increased its dividend rate eight times in the past eight years—a record never before equaled by another major life insurance firm. Over these same years, dividends on one of our $10,000 Ordinary Life Policies (issued to a man 35 years of age) increased 27%.

There are good reasons for this.

High investment return! An investment portfolio of selected securities and mortgages is under the constant supervision of highly qualified professionals.

Favorable mortality! This rate has always been low with Northwestern, but never lower than in recent years.

Low operating cost! Home office operations have always been simple. Now, with the added help of electronic equipment, NML employees give even more efficient service to policyowners.

All things considered, it is not surprising that Northwestern Mutual is known as "the dividend-paying company of America!"

Your Northwestern Mutual agent is listed in the phone book. Just call him for more information. The Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

NML

little else. Now a U.C.L.A. graduate student in physical education, Rafer Johnson shares an $83-a-month apartment with his brother Jim, a U.C.L.A. football player and a hurdler of near-Olympic caliber. Johnson has had no time for dates or vacations, and little relaxation beyond strumming a guitar. Every afternoon he got into his 1949 Chevrolet, a vehicle plainly showing its 150,000-mile past, and drove out to the U.C.L.A. field to practice.

There, day after day, Johnson and Yang held their own private meet. Formosa's formidable Yang had been a promising baseball pitcher at home in 1954 when track coaches noticed his running speed and agility, talked him into trying the decathlon. To his astonishment, Yang won the Asian Games that year. In 1958 Yang came to the U.S. for a couple of months to pick up pointers, liked it so well that he learned to speak English and settled down as a physical education student at U.C.L.A. to work with Johnson. At 6 ft. 1 in., 180 lbs., Yang does not have the raw strength of Johnson, but surpasses him in the jumping events. The two are a taciturn pair; the only sounds of their pre-Rome workouts were the explosive "poofs" as they exhaled at the start of a sprint, or anguished grunts from the weight rings. Each day they methodically pushed themselves to the grey edge of exhaustion. Says Coach Drake: "When an athlete goes in for the decathlon seriously, it's not just a matter of physical conditioning and training—it's a whole way of life."

In that sense, the decathlon poses an impossible challenge. No one man can ever hope to be the absolute best in all ten events. The lean sprinter will have trouble with the shot; the beefy weight man will lumber through the 100 meters. Worse yet, the events are cunningly alternated so that the competitor has no chance to use the same muscles and reflexes twice in succession. The cumulative effect is numbing. Because of his rare combination of speed and strength, Johnson is at his best in the 100 meters, 400 meters, the javelin, discus and shotput. But his weight is a handicap in the pole vault and high jump and, like every big man, he detests the 1,500-meter event that closes the two days of struggle. "The whole decathlon is ridiculous," says Johnson, "but the 1,500 meters is insanity." Why does he compete? Johnson gives the perfectionist's answer: "Because every time I walk out there, I think maybe I'll do a little better than the time before."

Johnson Fan. That same answer might well have come from Russia's Kuznetsov. At 6 ft. 1 in., 187 lbs., Kuznetsov, by profession a high school science teacher, has neither the size nor the natural talent of Johnson. To make the most of what he has, Kuznetsov has worked laboriously on his technique in each decathlon event since 1953, now exceeds Johnson in the pole vault and 1,500 meters, compares well with him in the broad jump, high jump and discus. Kuznetsov is proudly grooming his five-year-old son with the same thoroughness: "When we wake up in the morning, Vitya jumps on my bed and I hold him up balanced with one foot on my palm. He's got a long way to go to become an athlete, but now is the time to start training for the future."

Associated Press

JOHNSON & YANG
The objective amounts to obsession.

Kuznetsov is a Johnson fan: "He is a very fine, tactful and modest young man. I expect he will surpass his previous showing. I am sure that when we meet again in Rome we shall be good friends."

Just Poof. Kuznetsov, Johnson, Yang and a husky long shot from Oregon named Dave Edstrom (best score: 8,176) will likely turn the decathlon competition in Rome into the tensest in history. "It's only going to take one bad event to bump a guy right out of a gold medal," says Coach Drake. "A bad start in the sprints, a puff of wind at the wrong time in the high jump or pole vault, a foul in the shotput or discus, a broken stride in the hurdles, and poof, it could be all over for one of these boys."

Under such pressure, Johnson's greatest asset will be his bedrock of self-reliance, a quality that keeps him from having few really intimate friends, but allows him to work himself up to a cold competitive pitch ten times during the wearying grind of the decathlon. In Rome, Johnson will have an added incentive: he is quitting the decathlon after the Olympics. "I've had it," says Johnson. "It's time I started concentrating on a few other things."

Rafer Johnson would like eventually to travel abroad as a good-will representative for the U.S. State Department. "I know that sort of thing can do a lot to ease tensions," says Johnson. "I like people. I want to do all I can to help them in whatever little way I can." But first there is the matter at hand: a gold medal in Rome. Says Decathlon Star Rafer Johnson: "I am prepared to win—whatever that takes."

The Olympics

In every way it was a wonderful foot race. In at least one way it told more about the 1960 Olympics than any other single event. For nearly three laps, the winner—a hawk-nosed, crane-legged fellow with a familiar, loping stride—stayed back with the pack in the 1,500-meter race. Then, with disheartening ease, he moved past the leaders and began to draw away. Rounding the last turn, he saw his coach waving a white shirt as a signal that he had a chance to break his own world record of 3:36. Thereupon Australia's Herb Elliott, 22, sprinted down the middle of the track and broke the tape at 3:35.6.

Elliott's performance was the equivalent of a 3:52.6 mile. But every bit as remarkable was the fact that across the finish line after Elliott flashed a Frenchman, a Hungarian, a Swede, a Rumanian and the U.S.'s Dyrol Burleson—every one of them under the 1956 Olympic record of 3:41.2 set by Ireland's Ron Delany, who this year took one look at the tough competition and decided not to run.

In a strong sense, the finish of the 1,500-meter race dramatized the central point of the 1960 games: win or lose, never before had so many athletes from so many nations achieved such a high pitch of competitive accomplishment. Among the top events of the Olympics' final week:

¶ In the 400 meters, University of Oregon's Otis Davis, 28, seemed too inexperienced to stand up to the world's best. An itinerant athlete, he had originally signed on at Oregon as a basketball player, turned to track only two years ago. With little sense of pace, he barely qualified for the U.S. track team. In the finals, Davis' strategy was simply to stay with the field, then run every man into the ground. Coming around the turn, he accelerated past the leaders and headed for home at a clip that seemed to have him leaning backwards as his feet tried to run out from under him. Germany's Carl Kaufmann made a gallant dive at the tape, but Davis won in 44.9 sec. to break the world record by .3 sec.

¶ In the pole vault, the U.S.'s outspoken Don ("Tarzan") Bragg, 25, had made such an impression on the Italian press that one paper called him "the handsomest athlete in Rome and perhaps the vainest." Holder of the world record at 15 ft. 9¼ in., Bragg caused a brief flurry when he flubbed his first try at the qualifying height of 14 ft. 5¼ in. But when the competition settled down, Bragg forgot his nerves, his gimpy right knee, and the fact that he had to hoist a heavyweight's body of 6 ft. 3 in., 196 lbs., then cleared 15 ft. 5⅛ in. to break the Olympic record by 5⅝.

¶ In weight lifting, Russia's genial Alexander Kurynov, 26, had always venerated Hawaii's two-time Olympic Champion Tommy Kono, 30, as one of the world's great athletes. Matched against Kono in the middleweight division, the Russian research scientist quickly forgot his hero worship, scored one of the Olympics' notable upsets by breaking Kono's world record, surpassing him by 22 lbs., with a total of 964½ lbs. in three lifts, and taking the gold medal.

¶ In the 400-meter men's relay, California's Ray Norton, 22, set out to atone for his humiliating, sixth-place finishes in both the 100 and 200 meters. Running the second leg, Norton was so anxious to get going that he sprinted right out of the exchange zone before he got the baton. Duke's Dave Sime, the U.S. anchorman, later finished first by a flicker, but Norton's foul disqualified the U.S. team, gave the gold medal to Germany. "I'm sick up to here with running," said Norton, pre-Olympic favorite to win three gold medals. "When I get back home, I'm not going to move faster than a slow walk."

As expected, Russia easily defeated the U.S. for the unofficial team title by mining a lode of gold medals in such sports as women's gymnastics (5) and women's track (6). Unexpectedly, the proud U.S. men's track team won only nine gold medals (v. 15 in the 1956 Olympics), set chauvinistic officials to charging that the best event of American athletes was the marathon of wine, women and song. Lost in the furor was the obvious fact that the U.S. still easily dominated men's track (runner-up Russia had five gold medals) and had, in fact, sprung major surprises of its own on the world by grabbing nine gold medals in swimming, three in wrestling and three in boxing. By far the soundest judgment on the U.S. performances at the 1960 Olympic Games came from Manhattan College's canny George Eastment, a coach of the men's track team: "We're not a race of supermen, and it's about time we realized that the rest of the world can produce athletes too."

ANSA

AUSTRALIA'S ELLIOTT
Even the losers were winners.

Associated Press

TENNESSEE'S RUDOLPH
Over the blocks—and boom.

The Fastest Female

From the moment she first sped down the track of Rome's Olympic Stadium, there was no doubt that she was the fastest woman the world had ever seen. But that was only part of the appeal of the shy, 20-year-old Negro girl from Clarksville, Tenn. In a field of female endeavor in which the greatest stars have often been characterized by overdeveloped muscles and underdeveloped glands, Wilma ("Skeeter") Rudolph had long, lissome legs and a pert charm that caused an admiring Italian press to dub her "the Black Pearl." Last week Wilma Rudolph became the only track star, male or female of any country, to win three gold medals in the 1960 Olympics.

Running for gold-medal glory, Wilma Rudolph regularly got away to good starts with her arms pumping in classic style, then smoothly shifted gears to a flowing stride that made the rest of the pack seem to be churning on a treadmill. She tied the world record of 11.3 sec. in the 100 meters and won the final by three yds. She set an Olympic record of 23.2 sec. in the 200 meters and won the final by another three yds. Then, running with three of her Tigerbelle teammates from Tennessee State, Wilma anchored the winning 400-meter relay team and became the first American girl ever to win three gold medals in track.

The wonder was that Wilma Rudolph could run at all. The 17th in a family of 19 children, Wilma had a series of crippling childhood diseases, did not walk until she was eight, and then had to wear a high-top, corrective shoe. By high school, Wilma had improved enough to become a four-year, all-state basketball player and to clean up in track. Now a junior at Tennessee State, Wilma is studying to be a teacher (average grade: B plus), has so little trouble winning races in the U.S. that she has sometimes slowed down in mid-sprint to shout encouragement to a teammate.

In Rome Wilma turned out to be about the calmest person on the U.S. squad, contrasting sharply with her steady date, tense and tormented Sprinter Ray Norton. "There's not a nerve in her body," said Ed Temple, her college coach, who also handled the U.S. women's team in Rome. "She's almost lazy. She often goes to sleep between the semifinal and final runs. Then she gets over those starting blocks and—boom—all that harnessed energy explodes into speed."

As her fame grew, Wilma got dozens of telegrams in a smattering of languages. She patiently signed autographs by the dozen as Italian fans threw their books down on the field. The home-town Clarksville Leaf-Chronicle ran a laudatory editorial ("an inspiration to the world in general"), and Tennessee's Governor Buford Ellington, who had run for office as an "old-fashioned segregationist," made plans to head the welcome-home party. When the Olympics were done, Coach Temple could find only one fault with the record of the world's fastest woman: "Wilma's never been tested since she came into her form. We don't know how fast she really can go."

The Champion

In drama and accomplishment, their duel was the most stirring man-to-man competition of the Olympic Games. Drenched by rain, California's strapping Rafer Johnson, 26 (TIME cover, Aug. 29), and Formosa's wiry Yang Chuan-kwang, 27, had struggled until 11 p.m. on the first day of the decathlon—the exhausting, ten-event test that would decide which was the world's best all-round athlete. On the second day, after the two men had wearily completed the ninth event (the javelin), statisticians figured that Johnson led Yang by a cliffhanging 67 points.

"I hope it's all wrapped up before the 1,500 meters," Johnson had said. "I never want to settle one in that thing." But the 1960 Olympic gold medal was to be settled in "that thing": the metric mile, despised by all decathlon men because it demands brute endurance just as their last bit of strength is ebbing away.

"Judas Priest!" Up in the stands in seat 18, row 10, entrance 5 was a short, bald track coach who knew better than any other man just how much the 1,500 meters would cost Johnson and Yang. U.C.L.A.'s Ducky Drake had trained them both. For two days he had alternately worried about Johnson ("He's tense. Loosen up, Ray. Loosen up! Relax"), and exhorted Yang ("Judas priest! Get that blasted head down on that high jump"). Drake guessed that Johnson would forget about winning the 1,500 meters, try simply to stick close enough to Yang to preserve his overall decathlon lead. "If Ray doesn't tie up, he'll dog Yang all the way," said Drake. "He's got the heart to do it."

When the two men lined up in the chilly night, their sweat-soaked bodies reflected light from the flaring Olympic torch. Right from the start, Johnson took his position behind Yang. At the end of the third lap, Yang suddenly let his head loll down to his chest. "Come on, Ray!" yelled U.S. Olympic Basketball Coach Pete Newell in a voice that carried to the track. "Come on, boy. He's fading." As though he had been slapped, Yang snapped his head up and increased the pace. Johnson painfully lengthened his stride.

John G. Zimmerman—Keystone

DRAKE, YANG & JOHNSON
Inch by inch to the end of "that thing."

"Walk, Walk, Walk." Coming into the homestretch, Yang fought to gulp down air, and began his final bid for a gold medal. His lead grew to a foot, two feet, a meter. Inch by inch, Johnson somehow gained it back. Then, with only meters to go, Johnson's legs went dead. Momentum alone carried him to the finish line a bare 1.2 sec. slower than Yang's time of 4:48.5. That was close enough: the race of his career had won Johnson the gold medal by the Olympic record score of 8,392 to Yang's 8,334. Left far behind in the third place with 7,809 points was Russia's Vasily Kuznetsov.

With every rival conquered, Rafer Johnson later reaffirmed his decision to retire from the decathlon. "Tonight I'm going to shower and then just walk for about four hours and look at the moon," said Olympic Champion Johnson. "I don't know where—just walk, walk, walk. I've got to unwind. I'm through, man, I'm through."

Gold Label
PALMA CANDELA

If you smoke more than three cigars a day...

ACTUAL SIZE
26c • 4 for $1

Indulge yourself as often as you like in the satisfying mildness of this vintage Havana cigar. Its costly Cuban tobaccos never tire your taste.

Special offer to cigar connoisseurs

To add to your smoking pleasure, this elegant Nappa Calf cigar case, packed with 4 Gold Label Palma Candelas, is yours for the price of the cigars alone. (Offer limited. Only 1 to a smoker.) Send $1.00 with your name and address to:

Gradiaz, Annis & Co., Dept. A, Factory No. 1, Tampa, Fla.

The Customrolled Vintage Havana Cigar

1960 pletes Sweep of Am

Associated Press Wirephoto

NORTON TRIES ON ANOTHER UNIFORM: Under the gaze of Red Hickey, coach of the San Francisco 49ers, Ray Norton, Olympic sprinter, displays his football form at Redwood City, Calif., where the professional team trains.

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS FEBRUARY 17, 1961

TIME

THE WEEKLY NEWSMAGAZINE

(REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.) VOL. LXXVII NO. 8

The Graceful Giants

(See Cover)

These are the golden years for baseball, football and basketball, the big three of U.S. professional sport. Major-league baseball, expanded from coast to coast, has at last become national. Pro football, unequaled in its combination of violence and cunning, plays in stadiums that have been sold out for weeks in advance. Basketball, pro and amateur, is booming as never before.

Baseball has changed little since Babe Ruth first started swatting home runs over fences; football has been largely content to find new uses for old techniques of the pass and the T formation. But basketball, that peculiarly American sport, has undergone a dramatic transformation.

Within recent memory, basketball was a game of pattern plays as formal as any cotillion, of two-handed set shots that were lovely to watch but easy to block, of rules that set officials' whistles to shrilling at the flick of physical contact, and of defensive systems that held most scores well below the 60 mark. By those standards, today's game is absolutely unrecognizable in the professional National Basketball Association, which inevitably sets the style for college, high school and playground basketball.

Fast Break, Screen & Jump. As played by the pros, basketball is a rushing, bruising battle that leaves its gigantic players gasping for breath long after each game. Forcing the pace is a rule that requires a team to take a shot within 24 seconds of getting the ball. This means that at least 75% of the action develops from the kaleidoscopic swirl of the instant, and that play is dominated by:

The fast break, which sends three attackers sprinting down the floor against two defenders, or two against one.

The screen play, in which a player gives a teammate the necessary split second to shoot by planting himself between the shooter and his assigned defensive man.

The one-handed jump shot, which is almost impossible to stop without fouling the shooter.

Gone Goon. Basketball's offensive revolution has sent scores skyrocketing, until it now requires an average of 122 points to win an N.B.A. game. As the game has changed, so have the players. Teams once depended on three or four scorers; now every man on the floor can go over 20 points a game, the old yardstick of success. Says Los Angeles Lakers' Coach Fred Schaus, himself a pro only a few years ago: "It's incredible, but it's true that today's N.B.A. man, an average man, would have been a great star six, seven or eight years ago. Maybe now he's just a fourth or fifth man instead of a star."

Gone is the day of the glandular goon who could do little more than stand beneath the basket and stuff in rebounds. Philadelphia's Wilt ("The Stilt") Chamberlain, who leads the N.B.A. in scoring with an average 37.8, stands 7 ft. 2 in., but has the speed and agility to be a marvel were he half a foot shorter. St. Louis' Bob Pettit (6 ft. 9 in.) is quick and graceful, Boston's Bill Russell (6 ft. 10 in.) is a defensive and rebounding genius, Los Angeles' Elgin Baylor (6 ft. 5 in.) combines the brute strength of a pro football tackle with the supple coordination of an Olympic gymnast, and even at the advanced age of 32 Boston's Bob Cousy (dwarfish at 6 ft. 1 in.) remains the playmaking wizard of the game.

Complete Courtmen. Yet such are the demands of modern basketball that each of these players has a flaw, however slight. Chamberlain, Baylor and Pettit are less than superior as playmakers. Boston's Russell is an erratic scorer. Not only is the short Cousy no rebounder, but he is no great shakes on defense—despite his flashy interceptions.

Thus the dream of every basketball coach, both in the N.B.A. and among the amateurs, is to find the player who combines all the talents required by the modern game: scoring, playmaking, rebounding and defending. In the N.B.A.'s 1961 season, no player comes closer to fulfilling that ideal of the complete courtman than the Cincinnati Royals' Oscar Robertson, 22, a lithe (6 ft. 4½ in., 200 lbs.) Negro guard who was famed in college, as he is in the N.B.A., as "The Big O."

Last week, as the 1961 basketball teams headed down the stretch, N.B.A. statistics reflected Rookie Robertson's all-round excellence. His 30.1 game average placed him third among the league's scorers, a fact made all the more remarkable because, as Boston's Bill Sharman explains, "I've been the leading backcourt scorer in the league over the last nine years, and the best average I ever got was 22.3 points in 1958. Last year Detroit's Gene Shue beat that with a 22.8 average. Now along comes Robertson as a rookie averaging more than 30." Hitting on 47% of his shots, Robertson stands fifth in N.B.A. in accuracy. His rebounding (10 per game) is vastly respected. And with an average of 9.3 assists per game, Oscar Robertson has replaced the legendary Cousy as the league's leading playmaker.

Even more meaningful than the statistics are the tributes that come from rival players and coaches. Says Cousy himself: "Robertson is the best of his kind ever to come into the league." Says the Detroit Pistons' Coach Dick McGuire: "Oscar is better than Cousy ever was; Oscar is the finest player in basketball." Says Boston's sharpshooting Tommy Heinsohn: "He knows all the phases of the game—passing, shooting, rebounding. If he couldn't pass, you could play him differently, but if you double-team him for a second, you gamble. That calls for a pass, and he'll pass it."

THE BIG O AT WORK
A coach would pay to watch him play.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WALTER BENNETT

Pure Product. In almost every way, Cincinnati's Robertson is a pure product of the sport of basketball as it has developed in the U.S. The game was invented in 1891 in Springfield, Mass. by a gym instructor named Jim Naismith, who wanted to give his bored classes a switch from the daily grind of calisthenics. Today basketball is played with eager enthusiasm and improving skill by some 50 nations from Chile to China, but it has remained a distinctly American game. Its virtues are obvious: any number can play, indoors or out, in all seasons. It requires nothing more than a ball, and a basket that is much the same whether it hangs from a backboard in Madison Square Garden or a barn door in Kentucky. This season an estimated 150 million Americans will watch games played by some 20,000 high schools, 1,000 colleges, and swarms of amateur teams composed of players ranging from scurrying schoolboys to gimpy grandfathers.

What is more, to millions of Americans the game of basketball is more than a sport—it is the most important event on winter's social calendar. Once the winter wheat is in the ground in towns like Sharon Springs, Kans., there is little else to do but watch the games on Tuesday and Friday nights in the $190,000 school gym, the grandest building in the county. In Ohio, the citizens of Bethel Township regularly drop past Ray Morrison's general store to rock on their heels around the stove and talk of the local high school team (12 and 6 this season) and of Ohio State University's national champions, one of the great clubs of recent years.

But even the fans of Ohio and Kansas will admit that the biggest, noisiest and best basketball state of them all is Indiana, where every boy seems to be born with a hook shot and a stutter-step dribble. No one in Indiana sees anything odd about the fact that the gym in Huntingburg holds 6,300 persons, although the town's total population is 4,000. Folks from out of town just naturally want to drive in to see the games. Each March, Indiana explodes in the wildest high school tournament in the nation—four frenzied weekends of play that consistently draw more than 1,500,000 fans, last year grossed more than $1,000,000.

Into the Dust Bowl. Oscar Robertson, of course, learned his basketball in Indiana. Born on a farm near Charlotte, Tenn., Oscar was three when his family moved to Indianapolis, where his father landed a job in the city sanitation department. The Robertsons settled precariously in a grim, four-room, tarpaper-roofed house in the black ghetto on the west side of town. Just two blocks away was an outdoor basketball court known as the "dust bowl." In the dust bowl Oscar Robertson discovered basketball.

With no ball to shoot, young Oscar used to shy tin cans at the basket. When he was eight, he got a small ball that he would solemnly wash with soap and water every night. Not until he was eleven did he get his first full-sized ball, the discard of one of the families for whom his mother was then working as a domestic.

Robertson fires his one-hand jump in time to beat an attempted block . . .

. . . and the battle for the possible rebound begins beneath the backboard.

Everywhere that Oscar went, the ball was sure to go. He early became a basketball perfectionist. Nothing stopped his dribbling practice—eating supper, watching TV, reading. "I've got to control it," he would tell his brother Bailey, who later became good enough himself to win a spot on the Harlem Globetrotters. "I've got to control the dribble." Recalls his mother: "You couldn't sleep at night with that basketball going all the time. Bump! Bump! Bump!"

Cool & Hot. By the time he hit the eighth grade, Oscar was a skinny-armed, precocious hotshot who already was completely confident of his skill. In the city championship he dribbled away the last moments of each quarter, then coolly sank a basket as the last second ticked off.

Between his freshman and sophomore years at the all-Negro Crispus Attucks* High School, Oscar sprouted six inches to a weedy 6 ft. 2 in. (Oscar's height, the family insists, was inherited from a 6-ft. 5-in. great-grandfather, who was born a slave, died in 1954 at 116, reputedly the oldest U.S. citizen.) Playing against some of the best competition in the nation, Oscar made all-state three years, led his team to a 45-game winning streak and two state championships. Says Crispus Attucks' Coach Ray Crowe: "Oscar was good enough in high school to play pro ball."

Against the Grain. The 75 colleges that were after Oscar called so often that his father had the phone disconnected three times. Oscar finally chose the University of Cincinnati, partly because it was fairly close to home, mainly because it played a big-time schedule that hit Madison Square Garden, where he could test his game against the very best. Even after he had landed Robertson, Cincinnati Coach George Smith fretted that someone would steal his protégé. "Every time Oscar left town," recalls Teammate Ralph Davis, who also moved up to the Royals from Cincinnati, "Smith would start phoning campuses to see if he had been stolen."

Robertson was a prize well worth hijacking. In high school he had ranked a solid 16th in a class of 171, but at Cincinnati his grades in business administration fell off to C; Oscar had come to play basketball. He kept at least four basketballs in his room. "When the dribbling stopped," says Davis, who lived next door, "you knew Oscar had gone to bed." By this time Oscar had come to have a paternally protective feeling about a basketball, once chewed out a university publicity man for casually bouncing a ball on the pavement. "You'll ruin that ball. You'll rub off the grain and throw it off balance."

Bank Draft. As a sophomore, making his very first start in Madison Square Garden, Robertson scored 56 points, at the time the biggest night anyone—college or pro—had ever had in that shrine of basketball. Playing forward throughout his college career, Robertson set 14 major national marks, including a game average of 33.8 points. By the time he graduated last spring, he had become the only college player to lead the nation's scorers for three straight years.

Robertson was still a sophomore when he was claimed, under the N.B.A.'s territorial rule, by the Cincinnati Royals, who then sat back nervously to see if he would graduate before the team went bankrupt. Robertson made it just in time, drove a hard bargain with the Royals, who realized that he could always peddle his spectacular talents to the showboating, all-Negro Globetrotters. His three-year contract calls for an annual salary of about $33,000, plus a percentage of the gate that should boost the total take to around $50,000.

Price of Success. Off the court, basketball's new star has not yet learned to cope with the intrusions on his privacy that inevitably come with sudden success. He is diffident except with longtime friends, quietly shrugs off praise of his achievements. Explains his mother: "Deep within, Oscar likes the publicity, but he doesn't want to lose his head and hurt himself." But Robertson is also capable of public flashes of wry humor. When a confused fan once asked what team he played for, Robertson deadpanned: "The Chicago Black Hawks, of course."

Last summer Robertson married petite Yvonne Crittenden, a girl he had met in college and had been too shy to talk to on their first date. Yvonne teaches first grade in Cincinnati, which is almost more than her hero-worshiping pupils can bear. One child proudly uses Yvonne's full married name at every opportunity: "Mrs. Oscar Robertson, may I sharpen my pencil?" "Mrs. Oscar Robertson, may I go to the rest room?" When the Royals are in town, Robertson hunches over the kitchen table and meticulously helps Yvonne keep her school records, takes her dancing (he is accomplished in such steps as the "horse" and the "slop"), spins his records of Fats Domino, and resolutely stays in bed when she goes off to work. "Maybe he thinks he's not going to get enough sleep," says Yvonne. "Maybe all pro basketball players are tired all the time."

Shut-Eye. If they are not, they should be. Pro basketball bristles with violence. Falling players leave slippery smears of sweat on the floor that have to be mopped up with towels. Trainers use freezing sprays of ethyl chloride to relieve the pain of a sprain—and keep the man in the game. An estimated 85% of the pros play with nagging injuries—charley horses, jammed thumbs, pulled muscles—and St. Louis' Pettit and Syracuse's Dolph Schayes have kept going with broken wrists. Robertson himself is just getting over a torn muscle above his right hip, which benched him for five games. After a game, win or lose, the exhausted players slump silently on stools in front of their lockers. Pro basketball is now so much tougher than big-league baseball that Cousy scoffs at any comparison: "One of those guys runs out a triple, and he looks like he needs a stomach pump."

Almost as debilitating as the contact injuries are the rigors of travel. Any N.B.A. team is apt to find itself playing seven games in as many cities within ten days. As the westernmost team, Los Angeles this season will travel 100,000 miles to play a 79-game schedule. Conspicuous as a herd of giraffes, the N.B.A.'s big men have learned to cope with an alien world of threatening doorframes and ridiculously small chairs. At night they drape their

Bettmann Archive

BLOOMER GIRLS IN ACTION (CIRCA 1900)
Once it was as formal as a cotillion.

* Named for the mulatto who was the first man to be killed by British troops in the Boston Massacre, March 5, 1770.

HERE'S FAMED "DIAMOND HORSESHOE" IN METROPOLITAN OPERA HOUSE PRIOR TO C
It Appear All Seats Are Filled for "Girl of Golden West"; Conductor of Orchestra Is Fau

Harmony Starts at Met

NEW YORK, Oct. 24 (UPI)—Soprano Leontyne Price rode to operatic glory Monday night in the Metropolitan Opera's opening night presentation of grand opera's only horse opera, Giacomo Puccini's "Girl of the Golden West."

Though admittedly not Puccini's most inspired work, this melodramatic tale of love between a California mining camp angel and a handsome bandit proved to be another brilliant vehicle for Miss Price, a Negro singer from Laurel, Miss., who made her debut at the Met last season.

The 4,000 elegantly turned-out fans who paid $93,995 to welcome the Met's 77th season hailed Miss Price's sixth role at the Met with enthusiasm reserved for prima donnas. The audience also loved Jordan, the pure white Arabian horse which carried Miss Price onstage in the last act with the aplomb of an opera pro.

"I am a connoisseur of singing and I love your voice," Secretary of Labor Arthur Goldberg told Miss Price when he went backstage at the second act intermission to congratulate her. "This is a great performance!"

The Met paid special tribute to Goldberg, who saved the 1961-62 season after it had been canceled in August by assuming the role of arbitrator in a stalemated wage dispute between the opera and its orchestra. He was guest of honor at a reception and brought the best wishes of President Kennedy, whose personal interventi made arbitration possible.

"On behalf of all Americar I welcome the opening of t new season," Kennedy's m sage said. "The discord end let the harmony begin."

Miss Price shared vocal h ors with Richard Tucker, w was singing his 20th role at t Met with accustomed brillianc and Italian Baritone Anseln Colzani, who not only sa splendidly but turned out to the best actor in the cast.

FEATURE Page

Associated Press Wirephoto

PRIOR TO OPENING OF SEASON
rchestra Is Fausto Cleva

United Press International Photo

PATRICE MUNSEL ARRIVES WITH HUSBAND ROBERT SCHULER
Gold Lame Gown Designed by Nina Ricci; There's a Dropped Pouf in Back et ersonal intervention

ation possible.
f of all Americans, the opening of the ," Kennedy's mes-
'The discord ended, nony begin."
e shared vocal hon-chard Tucker, who his 20th role at the customed brilliance, Baritone Anselmo
o not only sang ut turned out to be r in the cast.

United Press International Photo

LEONTYNE PRICE (L), STAR OF MET'S OPENING NIGHT, CONGRATULATED BACKSTAGE
Secretary of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg (C) and Opera Great Richard Tucker Off to Ecumenical Council: A

By Barrett McGurn
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

Dr. Joseph H. Jackson, leader of the largest Negro religious group in the world, arrived in New York yesterday on his way to Rome to serve as one of the Protestant observers at the ecumenical council of the Roman Catholic Church.

Quiet talks setting up the system of observers already have created "closer relations between Catholics and Protestants which we will never be able to destroy," the presiding officer of the National Baptist Convention of America, commented in an interview.

Dr. Jackson's church claims 5 million members and is the largest American Negro organization, religious or civic.

Rev. Joseph H. Jackson

Dr. Jackson will be th
Baptist and the only sentative of a national c at the Catholic council w begins year-long sessio week from tomorrow. He that Pope John XXIII h asked him whether he agree to be an observer he told the pontiff in a dience last December American Negro Prote ought to have their own resentative. The council i tholicism's main law-m body and will meet next for the first time in nea century.

The Pope, said Dr. Jac remarked that "there shou no religious oppression" that "religious groups s

New York Herald Tribune

ncil: A Negro Baptist Leader

Jackson will be the sole st and the only repre- tive of a national church Catholic council when it s year-long sessions a from tomorrow. He said Pope John XXIII himself him whether he would to be an observer when ld the pontiff in an au- last December that ican Negro Protestants to have their own rep- ative. The council is Ca- ism's main law-making and will meet next week e first time in nearly a ry.

Pope, said Dr. Jackson, ked that "there should be eligious oppression" and "religious groups should live together if there is to be peace in the world."

Twelve world Protestant organizations will also be represented by observers.

Hatred among Christian denominations ought to end but the trend toward unity should not go so far as to create one single Christian or Judaeo-Christian church, Dr. Jackson believes. Variety, he said, is precious.

His decision to go to Rome was not without controversy, the minister added. He said that Southern white Baptists sent him a "messenger" cautioning against too close contact with the Pope but his board of directors decided unanimously to thank Pope John by telegram for the invitation.

"A Baptist body doing that," Dr. Jackson laughed. "Almost a miracle in itself."

Observers will be able to submit memoranda and will be allowed to sit in on discussions pertaining to Christian unity but the rest will be a closed-off, internal affair of the Catholic Church, Dr. Jackson commented. He will stay one month.

Dr. Jackson was also in an optimistic mood because of events at the University of Mississippi. He said that he had been criticized as an "Uncle Tim," as a too compliant Negro, but that events had proved him right in urging fellow Negroes to wait until the Federal government should step in at Ole Miss not in the name of Negroes but in the name of human justice and equality.

Massachusetts, Connecticut—Even Georgia

Negroes to the State Houses

By The Associated Press

Negroes score major political gains in Tuesday's elections across the nation. Two were elected to statewide offices for the first time in Massachusetts and Connecticut.

In New York State, however, where a Negro was nominated by a major party for a statewide office for the first time, he went down to defeat along with most of his running mates.

Georgia elected its first Negro state senator in 92 years.

In Pennsylvania, 10 Negroes—nine from Philadelphia and one from Pittsburgh, and all Democrats—were re-elected to the state House of Representatives. And one Philadelphia Negro, Democrat Robert N. C. Nix, was re-elected Congressman.

Negroes didn't fare well in Ohio, Colorado and Oklahoma. One Negro ran for a state office in each of those states and each lost.

Takin for Granted

Edward W. Brooke, who says, "hardly anyone even mentions I'm a Negro any more; I think it's progress," was elected Attorney General of Massachusetts. His opponent, a white man, was Democrat Francis E. Kelly, former lieutenant governor and onetime attorney General. It was Mr. Brooke's fourth try for public office and his first victory. And he was the only Republican elected this time in an otherwise Democratic sweep of statewide offices.

"I didn't hear one racial epithet during the whole campaign," said the 43-year-old Washington, D. C., native who lives in Roxbury with his wife and two children. "I didn't even receive any crank mail. And I don't think I was asked more than five questions on civil rights in the last two months."

Both major parties in Connecticut nominated Negroes for State Treasurer, and so one was sure to win. He was Democrat Gerald A. Lamb, 37-year-old dental technician and a three-term Waterbury city alderman.

The Republicans put up William D. Graham, a Hartford lawyer, for the treasurer nomination last June. A month later, the Democratic state convention found it advisable to come up with a Negro candidate of its own.

Edward R. Dudley, a Negro running for Attorney General on the Democratic ticket in New York State, lost to incumbent Republican Louis J. Lefkowitz. Mr. Dudley is Borough President of Manhattan. In Manhattan, Negro Rep. Adam Clayton Powell jr., D., won re-election in his Harlem district.

In Fulton County, Ga. (Atlanta), Leroy R. Johnston, Negro Democrat, defeated T. M. Alexander, Negro Republican, to become the first Negro state senator in Georgia since the days of Reconstruction.

Another Negro candidate for state senator from Fulton County, Republican Rod Harris, lost to Democrat Oby T. Brewer sr., a white man.

Negro Republican Leodis Harris was beaten in his try to oust four-term Democratic U. S. Rep. Charles A. Vanik in Ohio's 21st district, the Cleveland area.

Also beaten was Negro Robert Rhone, who ran 19th in a race for state representatives in Denver. The top 17 vote-getters were elected.

In a state legislative battle in Oklahoma, Negro Edward M. Porter, R., defeated by Democratic incumbent Bryce Baggett. Both are Oklahoma City attorneys.

The only Negro candidate in Arkansas also lost. He was Dr. William H. Townsend, an optometrist, who ran second in a three-man race for the city board of directors in Little Rock.

A Negro won a Congressional seat in California's 21st District in Los Angeles County against a Negro opponent, and three Negroes were elected to the California state Assembly, also in all-Negro contests.

Associated Press wirephoto

PRECEDENT IN ILLINOIS—Mrs. Edith Hampton, 60, at Democratic headquarters in Chicago early yesterday after she was elected to a Chicago municipal judgeship. Mrs. Sampson is first Negro woman ever elected to the bench in Illinois. She is a widow, a former member of the U. S. delegation to UN General Assembly.

Wills Voted N. L.'s M

MAYS IS RUNNER-UP

By Tommy Holmes
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

Mercury-footed Maury Wills has been elected the National League's most valuable player, which seems altogether equitable since the sad-faced little shortstop of the Dodgers fashioned the outstanding individual achievement of the year.

Ty Cobb's record of 96 stolen bases had been in the book so long that, until the 30-year-old Mr. Wills began to go-go-go this season, the 47-year-old mark of the old Georgia Peach seemed inviolate in this era of long-ball hitting.

Wills failed to pass the speedy ghost of Cobb in the old schedule limit of 154 games, but after 165 Dodger games, which included a three-chapter play-off for the pennant, he had committed 104 thefts, an almost unbelievable feat the way the game is played today.

The selection of Wills on the ballets of the committee of 20 baseball writers should be extremely popular even though there was a wide variance among the selectors themselves over the relative importance of speed and batting muscle.

It turned out there were four worthy candidates for the honor —wondrous Willie Mays of the Giants; Tommy Davis, Maury's Dodger teammate, and Frank Robinson, the redoubtable slugger of the Cincinnati Reds.

All four of these fine Negro ball players were named on all of the 20 ballets. All received first-place votes. Eight of these went to Wills, seven to Mays,

More on M.V.P.—P 12

Herald T

MAURY W

s Most Valuable Player

MAURY IS GRATEFUL

Herald Tribune—UPI

MAURY WILLS

By The Associated Press

SPOKANE.

Calm, grateful Maury Wills followed his usual routine yesterday—including an afternoon banjo lesson—with no special celebration after his selection as the National League's most valuable player.

"I was blessed," Wills said when informed he had been voted the league's top honor. "I was helped in everything I did this season."

Wills is still recovering from the strenuous season during which he set a base stealing record of 104. His family wouldn't awaken him for the many telephone calls, so it was late when he learned of his selection.

Wills laid much more stress on dedication than on special abilities for the records and honors that came his way this year.

"I worked hard ever since February—since spring training. You only get out of anything what you put into it. If you put in a little extra, sometime you're going to get something wonderful back," he said.

Wills was gareful for the special help and attention he received from coaches and managers and especially for the aid he got last season from Pete Reiser, of the Dodgers.

Reiser stressed dedication to the game, Wills said, and often kidded him into extra effort when Wills felt too tired and bruised to attempt another stolen base.

Wills has a busy schedule of speeches and personal ap-

More on WILLS—P 12

New York Herald Tribune 1962 Wednesday

NEGROES CRITICIZE KENNEDY

Negro leaders denounced Mississippi segregationists as "savages" and criticized President Kennedy's handling of the Meredith case at a rally Monday night in Harlem.

The rally, billel as a protest against "Mississippi madness," was held at 125th St. and Seventh Ave. It was attended by 600.

The demonstration was sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Among the 12 speakers were James Farmer, national director of CORE, Percy Sutton, head of the New York branch of the NAACP, and Mrs. Daisy Bates, leader of the Little Rock, Ark. school integration fight in 1957.

Mr. Farmer said that in the President's televised speech Sunday, he "talked about the war records and the courage of the white Mississippian. He did not tell of the black American who from time immemorial has been a hero in this country."

"He told about the court action to let Meredith go to school," Mr. Farmer said. "He failed to tell what Mississippi is doing wrong. He did not say that segregation must go, that Meredith must be allowed to go to classes, that the Federal government has a responsibility it can't shirk."

In Mississippi, he said, "the so-called representatives of the master race are acting like savages. Here in Harlem we are showing Americans throughout the country that we know how to act like human beings."

Mrs. Bates lashed out at the President for acting like a "politican."

"Why did the President hesitate in bringing the situation to a head?" she said. "Simply because he is a politician and there are not enough registered Negro voters in America for him to respect."

During the two-and-a-half-hour rally, which began at 6:30 p. m., police diverted southbound traffic on Seventh Ave. from 126th to 124th St. A speakers' platform was erected in front of the Hotel Theresa.

A colection at the demonstration brought $268.96, including a $100 bill.

During the afternoon, CORE-sponsored rallies were held on two city campuses—City College and Columbia University.

At City, 300 students in the Finley Center Grand Ballroom, 133d St. and Convent Ave., heard four speakers, including the president of the college, Dr. Buell G. Gallagher.

Dr. Gallagher denounced former Army Gen. Edwin Walker, who was arrested yesterday on Federal charges of "rebellion, insurrection and seditious conspiracy." He said: "Walker's rabble are already responsible for at least two deaths by violence.

"We have seen enough of irresponsible speeches and inflammatory actions," Dr. Gallagher said, "to make us certain that the careless word and the public posture are dangerous weapons, especially so when used by (resigned) Army generals with an axe to grind."

A CORE official laid the blame for the two deaths in the rioting to Gov. Ross Barnett and to indecision on the part of the Federal government.

"Now two people lie dead because of Governor Barnett's political mistake and the Federal government's tactical mistake," said Robert Gore, assistant community relations director for CORE.

At Columbia, a rally in the center of the campus—on 116th St. between Broadway and Amsterdam Ave.—attracted 300 students at its height. Two CORE officials spoke at 3 p. m.

On campuses outside New York City, a white armband was becoming a symbol of support for Mr. Meredith and criticism of violence. An officer of the National Student Association reported that wearing of the armbands, which started last week at Texas Christian University, was spreading to schools in the South and New England.

In Norwalk, Conn., 300 persons joined 11 ministers in a prayer meeting "for James Meredith and the embattled Negroes of Mississippi" on the City Hall steps. The speakers used a special police car quipped with microphones. The meeting, sponsored by the Norwalk branch of NAACP, laste about one hour.

How Do You Stop Him?

He stood there, just to the right of the basket, a placid, 7-ft. 1 1/16-in. giant, watching impassively as his teammates maneuvered the ball in backcourt. The New York Knickerbockers tried to box him in; they clutched at his jersey, leaned against his chest, stepped on his toes. Then Wilt Chamberlain came alive. With the aplomb of a cop palming an apple, he reached out one massive hand and plucked the basketball out of the air. Spinning violently, he ripped clear of the elbowing surge, took a step toward the basket and jumped. For an instant, he seemed suspended in mid-air, his head on a level with the 10-ft.-high basket. Slowly, gently, the ball dribbled off his fingertips, through the net, and the San Francisco Warriors went on to a 142-134 victory. New York Coach Ed Donovan sadly shook his head. "He's phenomenal," he sighed. "How does anyone stop Wilt Chamberlain?"

"A Sort of Anticipation." Nobody does. At 26, Chamberlain is the best basketball player who ever lived. Alone, Chamberlain cannot make his team a consistent winner —last week the Warriors trailed the first-place Los Angeles Lakers by 17 games—but he gives San Francisco fans plenty to crow about. In 1960, his first season as a pro, he was named the National Basketball Association's Rookie of the Year and its Most Valuable Player as well. Nobody ever did that before. Nobody ever averaged 42 points a game throughout a pro career either, or scored 100 in a single night. And nobody comes near matching Wilt's all-time season records for minutes played (3,882), points scored (4,029) and rebounds (2,149)—records that Chamberlain himself breaks almost every year. The N.B.A. record book lists 86 players who have scored more than 50 points in one game, and 57 of them are named Wilt Chamberlain. "Wilt has that something that separates the great from the near great," says the Boston Celtics' Bill Russell, Chamberlain's good friend and bitterest rival. "It's a sort of anticipation. You never know what he's going to do, but you know it's going to be out of the ordinary. The important thing about him is his originality. Nobody ever played basketball the way Wilt Chamberlain does."

PETER BREINIG

CHAMBERLAIN AT WORK
He can't hide . . .

Most basketball stars have one great talent: Russell's is defense, Elgin Baylor's is shooting, Bob Cousy's is setting up plays and passing. Chamberlain does almost everything, better than anyone else. He is the pros' fiercest rebounder, and his shooting repertory includes such inimitable specialties as the "Dipper Dunk" (in which he simply stretches up and lays the ball in the basket), the "Stuff Shot" (in which he jumps up and rams the ball through the net from above), and the "Fadeaway Jump"—a delicate, marvelously coordinated push shot from 15 ft. away that defensive men literally cannot block without fouling. At the free-throw line, where he is most uncomfortable—and most criticized—Chamberlain does a journeyman's job. He holds the all-time league record for foul shots in one season (835), once sank 28 out of 32 in a regulation-length game. The only man who ever beat that is Boston's Cousy—and he needed four overtime periods to hit 30. "Wilt has backcourt set shots too," says Warrior Coach Bob Feerick. "But he just shoots them now and then to show he can."

Watch Him Walk. The son of a 5-ft. 8-in. handyman in Philadelphia, Chamberlain started drawing attention when he was 15 and playing junior-high ball. He was already 6-ft. 10-in. tall and towered over the other kids like a giraffe. But at first he yearned to be a track, not a basketball star. In high school, he could high-jump 6 ft. 4 in., and put the shot 45 ft. "I gave up track," he says simply, "because there wasn't any money in it." Concentrating on basketball at Philadelphia's Overbrook High School, Chamberlain averaged 36.3 points a game over a three-year span, spent his summers at a resort in New York's Catskill Mountains playing with college stars on a team coached by the Boston Celtics' Red Auerbach. Most overgrown teen-agers seem to have two left feet. Auerbach recalls being startled by Chamberlain's remarkable poise and his lynx-like grace on a basketball court. "The first time I saw Chamberlain," he says, "I just stood and watched him walk. Just watched him walk. It was incredible."

College coaches watched him lope the length of a court in what seemed like five or six giant strides, and some 200 schools eagerly sought Wilt's services—for pay, of course. He was promised room, board, tuition, a car, plane rides home to Philadelphia and $60 a week "pocket money" to go to the University of Dayton, but Chamberlain decided on Kansas, partly because Coach Forrest ("Phog") Allen was the only recruiter who suggested that he could get an education at college too. In his sophomore year, Chamberlain led the Kansas Jayhawkers to the N.C.A.A. finals. Then he quit school, toured the world with the Harlem Globetrotters, and signed on with the Warriors.

Good, Clean & Green. For playing as nobody else does, Wilt Chamberlain gets paid more than anybody else (about $65,000 a year), and he spends it carefully, on himself. Unlike many Negro champions, he does not champion Negro causes. "The best way to help integration," he says, "is to live a good, clean life"—and Wilt Chamberlain's life has the good, clean smell of new money. He owns a swinging Harlem nightclub named Small's Paradise, a summer basketball camp in upstate New York, real estate in Philadelphia, a bulging portfolio of mutual funds, and a 38-apartment development in Los Angeles that he calls "Villa Chamberlain." He sports a sparkling three-carat diamond ring on his left pinky, lives in

CHARLIE DOUGHERTY

AT PLAY (WITH BENTLEY)
. . . behind dark glasses.

100 YEARS AFTER LINCOLN SET THE SLAVES FREE . . .

—USN&WR Photo

HOSTS AND GUESTS: At a White House reception on February 12 observing the centennial of Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation: In the front row—(1) Mrs. Robert F. Kennedy; (2) Vice President Johnson; (3) Mrs. Johnson; (4) President Kennedy; (5) Mrs. Kennedy. Standing behind them—(6) Dr. Erwin Griswold, dean of Harvard Law School; (7) Mrs. Griswold; (8) Dr. Robert C. Weaver, Administrator, Housing and Home Finance Agency; (9) Carl T. Rowan (partly hidden), recently nominated as U.S. Ambassador to Finland; (10) Mrs. Weaver; (11) Mrs. Leroy Johnson; (12) Leroy Johnson, a State senator in Georgia; (13) Roy Wilkins, executive secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; (14) James Farmer, national director, Congress of Racial Equality; (15) Mrs. Farmer; (16) Dr. Spottswood Robinson, III, dean of Howard University Law School; (17) Mrs. John H. Johnson; (18) Mrs. Charles C. Diggs, Jr., wife of a Michigan Congressman; (19) Mrs. Whitney Young, Jr.; (20) Whitney Young, Jr., executive secretary, National Urban League; (21) John H. Johnson, publisher of "Ebony" magazine; (22) Lee C. White, assistant special counsel to the President; (23) Mrs. White.

Lew Alcindor—Power's Spaceman

15 Years Old and Still Growing

Power's 7-Ft., 1/4-In. Alcindor New Phenom of Basketball

By Sam Goldaper
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

New York City scholastic basketball has produced its share of college and pre standouts, but never a seven-footer. Now that eventuality doesnn't seem too far off.

Probably never in the local history of the sport has anone stirred more interest than a 15-year-old sophomore—Lew Alcindor, of Power Memorial Academy, an Irish-Christian Brothers institution on 60th St. and Amsterdam Ave., in the shadows of Lincoln Center.

The chief reason for the excitement is Alcindor's height. At the moment he measures 7 feet, ¼ inch, and he is still growing.

But can he play basketball? That answer is an emphatic "yes" from some of the top authorities of the game, including Joe Lapchick, the St. John's coach; Ken Norton, of Manhattan, and Eddie Gottlieb, general manager of the San Francisco Warriors.

Basketball coaches have ways of discovering seven-footers, whether they live in New York City or Timbuktu.

The word is out on Alcindor. No one knows it better than Norton. The Jasper coach spoke at a luncheon of the Chicago Basketball Writers in December and mentioned Alcindor.

A writer asked him to spell the name and Norton obliged by spelling it "SINDOR." The school sounded like "Powell" to the reporter.

The following then was reported to have happened:

"No," said Ed Hickey, the Marquette coach. "Its POWER. When we played St. John's in the Garden we worked out in the Power Memorial gym. We had the tallest ballboy we've ever seen and his name is Alcindor . . . Spanish name."

"What's his first name? I've forgotten," said George Ireland, the coach of Chicago Loyola, who had six New Yorkers (four varsity and two freshmen) on his NCAA championship team this year.

"It's Ferdinand Lewis Alcindor, Junior, broke in Seattle coach Vince Cazzetta, who has 6-9 Waverly Davis, a graduate of Power Memorial, on his squad.

Alcindor, or "El Cid" as he has been tabbed by his teammates, came to Power Memorial from St. Jude Parochial School, not far from Manhattan College.

The only child of a 6-foot-2½ New York City Transit patrolman, Alcindor stood 6-8 as an eighth-grader at St. Jude. In his freshman year at Power, he was 6-10½.

Jack Donohue has brought the 220-pounder, who wears a size 16D sneaker and sleeps in a 7-foot-6 bed, along slowly. During his freshman y ear, Alcindor averaged 12 points a game.

The past season, when unbeaten Power won 27 games, the Catholic title and the St. Peter's College Invitational, Alcinder dunked 515 points for a 19.1 average, shot 53 per cent from the floor and 66 per cent from the foul line, and pulled down 444 rebounds, an average of 16 a game.

During his freshman year "El Cid," who eats good size meals (he often tosses in a pizza or a double order of French fries) maintained a 91 per cent average for a top 10 per cent rating in his class of 340.

This year his scholastic average is 89-plus, again in the top 10 per cent among the 300 sophomores.

"The only special practice we have for Lew is rope-jumping," said Donohue. "We keep working on his coordination and his timing.

"After the season Lew plays no basketball at all. During the summer I take him to my camp, where he is a dishwasher. All his spare time is devoted to basketball—three or four hours a day."

Power this past season was likened to some of the best local high school basketball teams of all time. The dynasty will continue into next year and maybe longer.

Back with Alcinder will be Dan Nee, 6-4; Jack Bettridge, 6-2; Arthur Kenny, 6-7, and Jim Manari, 6-2. St. Jude is sending another blossoming giant, Tom Murray, 6-4.

Oh, yes, Power also won the Catholic schools junior varsity and freshman titles.

If Alcindor continues at this rate of progress—and many, including Gottlieb, say it's faster than Wilt Chamberlein's at this age and scholastic stage—the bidding for him will be heavy.

The Knicks, too, will get into the act. They want to see Lew stay in New York City so that they can claim territorial rights to him.

Gene Shue said last season, after seeing Alcinder in a Garden game preceding the Knicks, "We'll trade two future draft choices for him right now."

American League's

EARL BATTEY
Twins, catcher

AL KALINE
Tigers, rightfield

LEON WAGNER
Angels, leftfield

FRANK MALZONE
Red Sox, third base

All-Star Vote Surprises: Pepito

Mantle Elected, Pearson Will Sub at C

Shortstop Dick Groat of the St. Louis Cardinals led all National League vote-getters and right fielder Al Kaline of the Detroit Tigers was the American League's top vote-getter Saturday as the players selected their starting line-ups for the All-Star game in Cleveland Tuesday.

Groat, acquired by the Cards in a winter trade with Pittsburgh, received a whopping 238 votes to top Los Angeles' Maury Wills. The National League's Most valuable player of 1962 drew only 25 votes.

Kaline, who missed out on the 1962 team because of a shoulder separation sustained just before the voting, was named on 226 ballots. Bob Allison, the league leader in home run and runs batted in got only 25 votes.

The biggest surprise in an otherwise cut-and-dried selection was the one-sided victory gained by veteran Frank Malzone over Baltimore's Brooks Robinson and New York's Clete Boyer for third base honors.

Malzone, currently leading the American League in hitting, received 184 votes to only 67 for runner-up Robinson. Boyer was even further behind.

There were only seven repeaters from the 1962 squads. Five are in the National League. They are Pittsburgh second baseman Bill Mazeroski, St. Louis third baseman Ken Boyer, San Francisco center fielder Willie Mays, Los Angeles left fielder Tommy Davis and Groat.

The American League repeaters are left fielder Leon Wagner of the Angels and catcher Earl Battey of the Twins.

Mickey Mantle, last year's American League starting center fielder, beat Albie Pearson of the Angels for the starting center field berth, 131 votes to 104. Little Albie was named to the starting tem, however, because the Yankee slugger, who suffered a broken bone in his foot on June 5, will not be ready.

In a special vote, Pearson received 90 additional alternate votes on the assumption that Mantle wo lined.

The only two r All-Star compe first baseman Jo the Yankees a Zoilo Versalles c Pepitone, play full season, be Stuart of the F votes to 62. V scored Luis Ap Orioles, 183 vote ricio was the st stop last year.

Back on the s was veteran Nell Chicago White feated Bobby R the Yankees for honors.

Eleven teams

National League's Le

WILLIE MAYS
Giants, centerfield

ED BAILEY
Giants, catcher

TOM DAVIS
Dodgers, leftfield

BILL MAZEROSKI
Pirates, second base

ue's Starting Players

NELSON FOX
White Sox, second base

ZOILO VERSALLES
Twins, shortstop

JOE PEPITONE
Yankees, first base

ALBIE PEARSON
Angels, centerfield tone at 1st and Malzone at 3rd at Center

tle would be side-

y two newcomers to competition were man Joe Pepitone of kees and shortstop salles of the Twins. e, playing his first on, beat out Dick the Red Sox, 112 62. Versalles out- is Aparicio of the 33 votes to 46. Apa- the starting short- year.

the starting squad an Nellie Fox of the White Sox. He de- bby Richardson of ees for second base teams were represented on the All-Star squads. The Cards placed three men, Bill White beat out Orlando Cepada of the Giants for first base to join teammates Groat and Boyer. The Giants, Twins and Angels had two men each.

The National League's second biggest vote-getter was Hank Aaron of Milwaukee, the National League's home run leader. Aaron, beaten out by Roberto Celemente for the right field berth last year, turned the tables on the Pittsburgh outfielder, 230 votes to Roberto's 22.

The pitchers and remaining members of the two 25-man squads will be named during the week. They will be chosen by the rival managers, Ralph Houk of the American League and Alvin Dark of the National.

Top 2 in All-Star Voting

NATIONAL LEAGUE

First base—Bill White, St. Louis, 220; Orlando Cepeda, San Francisco, 38.

Second base—Bill Mazeroski Pittsburgh, 227; Ken Hubbs, Chicago, 14.

Third base—Ken Boyer, St. Louis, 186; Ron Santo, Chicago, 52.

Shortstop—Dick Groat, St. Louis, 238; Maury Wills, Los Anegeles, 25.

Leftfield—Tommy Davis, Los Angeles, 141; Frank Robinson, Cincinnati, 82.

Centerfield—Willie Mays, San Francisco, 168; Vada Pinson, Cincinnati, 82.

Rightfield—Hank Aaron, Milwaukee, 230; Roberto Clemente, Pittsburgh, 22.

Catcher—Ed Bailey, San Francisco, 129; John Edwards, Cincinnati, 82.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

First base—Joe Pepitone, New York, 112; Dick Stuart, Boston, 62.

Second base—Nelson Fox, Chicago, 141; Bobby Richardson, New York, 68.

Third base—Frank Malzone, Boston, 184; Brooks Robinson, Baltimore, 67.

Shortstop — Zoilo Versalles, Minnesota, 183; Luis Aparicio, Baltimore, 46.

Leftfield—Leon Wagner, Los Angeles, 169; Carl Yastrzemski, Boston, 51.

Centerfield—Mickey Mantle, New York, 131; Albie Pearson, Los Angeles, 104.

Rightfield—Al Kaline, Detroit, 226; Bob Allison, Minnesota 25.

Catcher—Earl Battey, Minnesota, 196; Elston Howard, New York, 70.

Leading Vote-Getters

DICK GROAT
Cardinals, shortstop

BILL WHITE
Cardinals, first base

KEN BOYER
Cardinals, third base

HANK AARON
Braves, rightfield

Newsweek

JUNE 24, 1963 25c

Alabama's Vivian Malone

'We owe them—and we owe ourselves—a better country ...'

—PRESIDENT KENNEDY

COL C C EARLY U
231 PEACHTREE BTTL NW
ATLANTA S GA
09910032I 201400033H 30664

Misses Smith, Bueno Win at Orange Before the Deluge

Ashe, 1st Negro, on U. S. Davis Cup Team

By Al Laney
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J.

Of course, the grass courts at the Orange Lawn Tennis Club were flooded yesterday, as was everything else in the vicinity, and so the Eastern championships were put so far behind that the prospect now is that both men's and women's finals will not be played before Monday.

Only two of the 16 matches in the third round were played before the rains began about an hour after noon and everybody ran for cover. In these, two of the main players, Margaret Smith, the Australian girl who is Wimbledon and United States champion, and Maria Bueno, who has held both these titles in the past, got through just in time.

Miss Smith defeated Nadine Netter, Scarsdale, 6—2, 6—2, and Miss Bueno beat Carole Wright, 6—4, 6—2.

Davis Cup Squad Named

Then everybody sat around and watched it rain and it was quite clear to everyone within a few minutes that all play was over for the day. Presently came Harcourt Woods, chairman of the Davis Cup committee to announce his group's selections for the team that will play Mexico in Los Angeles, Aug. 16-18.

Two of the members, Chuck McKinley and Dennis Ralston were pretty well known in advance. The other two are Arthur Ashe, the fine Negro youth whose game is improving so rapidly, and Martin Riessen, known principally as a very good doubles player.

Ashe is the first Negro ever to be named to a Davis Cup team and though most people think McKinley and Ralston will play the singles, Ashe is quite good enough already to draw the assignment if Ralston, who is nursing an injured hand, should be unable to play.

Ashe Fine Prospect

And Ashe, who has just passed his 20th birthday, has improved so rapidly and is now so good we are justified in having confidence that he might account for a point in that Mexican series, in which Rafael Osuna and Antonio Palafox will play both singles and doubles.

These two young Mexicans eliminated our team a year ago in Mexico City and then went on to challenge Australia for the cup at Christmas time Down Under. Together they hold the Wimbledon and United Staes doubles title and Riessen apparently was chosen for the team as a doubles replacement for Ralston, again if Dennis' hand will not permit him to play.

Riessen, with Clark Graebner, another Northwestern University student, as partner, has recently won both the National clay court and the Pennsylvania doubles titles and is regarded as our best doubles player other than the top men, McKinley and Ralston.

Outlook More Hopeful

Both he and Ashe are as good second-string players as we could name to the team and, since McKinley, who won the Wimledon title a month ago, probably should be good for two singles points, we are in a much more hopeful Davis Cup situation than last year.

Ashe and Graebner will leave for Los Angeles to join the others when their duties are done at Orange. McKinley, who won at Merion last Sunday and took a week off, also is on his way from his home in St. Ann, Mo., and Ralston lives out there.

Meanwhile, the Orange tournament will pick up today where it left off with the 14 remaining third-round singles matches down for decision if the courts are in shape.

The committee announced late in the day that the tournament would end just the same on Sunday. It is a good trick if they can do it and if they can persuade players to play two matches in one day.

Herald Tribune photo by BILL SAURO

Arthur Ashe, 20-year-old UCLA junior, yesterday became the first Negro to be named to a United States Davis Cup squad.

Son a Winner for South Orange Visitors

Ashe's Family Finally Sees Newest Davis Cup Player

By Al Laney
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J.

When Arthur Ashe jr., the 20-year-old junior at UCLA, became the first Negro ever to be named to the Davis Cup team during Thursday's deluge at the Orange Lawn Tennis Club, the news was a little slow in reaching Richmond, Va., his home town.

Arthur sr., who is a special officer in the Richmond police department, was quite busy when the word finally came. Mr. Ashe was asigned that day to the parks of the city and was having a mild case of integration demonstration trouble in one of them.

He got that in hand without extreme difficulty and early yesterday morning he and Mrs. Ashe, accompanied by various relatives made it to the club here before young Arthur was called for his match in the third round of the Eastern Grass Court championships.

It is a great honor, the parents feel, that has come to their boy and they are quite conscious of it. People gathered around them, made a fuss over father and son, snapped many pictures and even taped an interview.

Mr. Ashse is a strong athletic-looking man of better than average height himself, but he seems small beside his tall, handsome 6-foot and more son. The father is pleasant, friendly and a fine-looking physical speciment but not so imposing as Arthur jr.

He seemed a little embarrassed to be made so much of. He appeared to think he and Arthur's mother and aunts could just slip into the club without attracting any attention.

Mr. Ashe said naturally they wanted to see the boy before he sets out for Los Angeles and the Davis Cup American Zone final series with Mexico, which is scheduled for Aug. 16-18 at the Los Angeles Tennis Club.

Arthur jr. has been on the tennis circuit pretty m ch ever since school was out in early June playing here and there—even at Winbledon—and hasn't really had time for a visit home.

Asked if any of the family would go to California to see the boy play, Mr. Ashe replied: "Lord, no. I can't afford to travel around the world like Arthur does. I have to get back to my job."

It was pretty obvious that all the Ashes are immensely proud of Arthur. When people let them be and quit asking questions, they all went quietly into the general admission section of the stands and watched while Arthur was playing and beating Keith Stoneman of Greenville, S. C.

They were watching a fine athlete and a fine young man who could teach a lot of other young tennis players how to conduct themselves on court and of it.

Special officer Ashe may have a bit of integration trouble awaiting him when he returns to his Richmond parks, but there is not going to be any problem at all for his son Arthur in the tennis world.

Arthur jr. also is a fine player who is improving so rapidly there is no telling how high he may go.

We have had a Negro woman's champion in Althea Gibson and it certainly is not beyond possibility that we may have in Ashe a winner of the even bigger title in the years ahead.

Herald Tribune photo by BILL SAURO

Arthur Ashe, the United States' newest Davis Cup team member, appears a bit concerned about appearing before his parents who attended yesterday's matches at South Orange. But Ashe set back Keith Stoneman, 7—5, 6—2.

Promotion Chances Better For Negro Army Officers

WASHINGTON (NNPA). — The Department of the Army has ordered its commanders in the field to set up the recuitment and promotion of Negro offficers.

But it wants the job done in what is calls "an orderly manner" so as not to give the impression that these officers are being upgraded on the basis on race alone.

Personnel people at the Pentagon are emphasing that they want more attention paid to non-whites.

After their selection for promotion, qualified Negro officers will also receive greater attention for assignment to the so-called "prjestige" jobs. These jobs generally fall in the area of high command and staff posts.

The most recent strength figures divulged by the Army show that Negro offficers comprise 3.2 percent of all officers on duty. Of the 3,150 colored officers now serving, six are colonels, 117 are lieutenant colonels and 424 are majors.

There is only on Negro general officer in all branches of the military service. He is Major Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., who is chief personnel officer for the Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps do not fare as well as those in the Army. The Air Force has six colonels among its 1,300 colored offficers, but only 67 lieutenant colonels and 124 majors.

The Navy, with a total of 174 colored officers on its rolls, has none above the rank of commander, the equivalent of an Army lieutenant colonel. It has 3 commanders, 17 lieutenant commanders (majors) and 88 lieutenants (captains).

At the bottom of the list is he Marine Corps, which has only 32 colored officers altrogether 7 captains, 16 first lieutenants and 9 second lieutenants.

Jimmy Brown and

Browns' Coach

By Harold Rosenthal
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

In Cleveland the Indians and the Browns occupy office space in cavernous Municipal Stadium, and both have Tower 1 telephone numbers. After that all similiarity ceases; the Browns are en route to a big year under their first-year coach, Blanton Collier, while the Indians are going to spend the off-season trying to squelch rumors that their franchise is being moved.

The Browns move into New York Sunday for the No. 1 game of the N. F. L. season so far and with them comes the game's No. 1 runner, Jimmy Brown. The word is that Collier is running on a happy ship, and Brown is laughing and joking between slashes at enemy defenses, something he didn't do the last few years under Paul Brown. Said a club spokesman yesterday, "They're doing all kinds of things now, running and pasing, and Jimmy going to the outside, that Brown would never permit when he had the club."

In Paul Brown's last year he split with the Giants, beating them by ten points in his home opener, then dropping a close decision. The outcome of the second game had no material effect on the Eastern division race.

This year Collier, an old Paul Brown assistant, has a couple of new things going for him, a Jimmy Brown on a record-breaking pace and a quarterback, Frank Ryan, who has apparently found himself after floundering with the Rams.

Ryan took the job when Jim Ninowski failed to impress in the pre-season games, and he's played every minute to date. Helping establish Ryan has been the emergence of second-year Gary Collins as a first-rate flanker back.

Collins, the Browns' No. 1 draft in 1962, caught a couple of TD passes Saturday night in the TV game with the Steelers which was seen through the Eastern half of the U. S. The Giants, in Washington, spent the evening watching this tandem carefully.

It seems almost a shame to subject a fellow like Ryan to the merciless buffeting a pro quarterback is required to face without flinching. There was a cock-eyed rumor around at the Cleveland doubleheader in which the Giants participated in Aug. (they beat the Lions then) that Ryan was a nuclear physicist. Actually he's working toward his Ph. D in geometric functional theory at Rice Institute. It seems almost criminal to subject him to the kind of combing he figures to get from the Giants.

Don't waste any pity on Jimmy Brown, however. He's racked up 664 yards in four games, is ahead of his record pace of 1958 when he established the al-time high of 1527. Last year he rolled for 134 yards in the first Giant game; in the second Sam Huff and Co. nailed him and kept him to 55. This year he has outgained the entire Giant offense by almost 150 yards.

The Giants suffered two casualties in the Washington game . . . Lou Kirouac, the offensive end, received a severely-bruised shoulder on the next to last play of the first half and he was x-rayed for a possible break . . . defensive back Eddie Dove, spent the night in the hospital for observation for a possible concussion . . . . Giants achieved season highs versus the Redskins in first downs (26), passing yardage (302), and Del Shofner and Joe Walton had their best yardage days . . . Y. A. Tittle's three touchdowns equalled earlier efforts against Baltimore and Philadelphia. . . . Inability of the Giants to run their plays because of the crowd noise following the passer—roughing penalty in the third period was the first in Allie Sherman's head coaching experience, but Jim Lee Howell remembered similiar experiences in places like Green Bay and Baltimore. . . . Said Howell: "What makes it tough today is that you have so many checkoffs that you have to hear. . ."

New York Herald Tribune

and Co. Head This Way

h Runs Happy Ship

owever. He's ards in four of his record n he estab-
me high of e rolled for first Giant econd Sam led him and
This year he the entire almost 150

uffered two Washington
ouac, the ofeived a sev-ulder on the of the first x-rayed for . . . defensive e, spent the pital for ob-possible connts achieved sus the Red-ns (26), pas-02), and Del
Walton had ge days . . .
hree touch-arlier efforts e and Phila-bility of the eir plays bewd noise foler—roughing third period
Allie Sher-ching exper-
Lee Howell niliar exper-s like Green ore. . . . Said akes it tough you have so that you have

After being intercepted nine times in the first three games Jet quarterback Dick Wood managed to keep the slate Meanwhile the Jets intercepted four on Tommy Yewcic and when the injured Babe Parilli came in for one series they snatched one on him, too. . . .

Wood moved up from eighth to seventh in the league's passing standings. . . . Larry Garron, of Boston, continues the AFL's rushing leader despite his meager 39 yards against the Jets. . . . Rookie running back, Billy Joe, of Denver, jumped from fifth to third on the basis of his outstanding effort against San Diego. . . . New York's Dainnard Paulson moved from a third-place tie to second in interceptions with four. . . . Tommy Morrow, of Oakland, leads the league with eight. . . . Bill Miller, of Buffalo, just missed the A.F.L. receiving mark of thirteen with a dozen receptions against Oakland. . . . New York-San Diego game, pitting divisional leaders (how about that for a betting parley with the Dodgers winning the Series four straight?) will be on network TV and will be seen in New York on Channel 7 Sunday starting at 4:30. . . . Giants-Browns blacked out, of coure, locally but a half-dozen additional motels have installed powerful anteena, as have some of the exclusive yacht clubs on Long Island Sound so you can start making telephone calls early.

JIMMY BROWN—Off and Running picture

11-15-63

logues of the Carmelites. Last week, when the opera went on tour to Los Angeles, the critics sounded almost as infatuated—petite! graceful! enchantingly pretty! The last time a new singer so captured the San Francisco season, the object of affections was Leontyne Price.

Grist has none of Price's sensuous power, either in voice or performance. She is a coloratura to the heart; her voice has a light, facile, May-wine beauty, and her acting is warmed by fluttery humor and grace. In opera's endless supply of roles for frivolous coquettes, she could hardly be better off, but the buoyant ease of her voice is her main distinction: she stopped a performance of Ariadne auf Naxos in her La Scala debut with a crystalline rendition of Zerbinetta's notoriously difficult aria.

Singing in the Fields. Reri ("Who ever heard of a name like Reri?" she says) grew up in Harlem. Her mother tugged her around to auditions when she was a child, as much to get her off the streets as onto the stage. She won a succession of small singing bits before she was 20. Her best Broadway role was Consuelo in the 1957 production of West Side Story, in which she sang Somewhere, the show's most operatic song. Upon hearing her, Composer Leonard Bernstein invited her up the street to sing in Mahler's Fourth with his New York Philharmonic. Since then she has sung only classical.

She forged the basis of her career during a camping tour of Europe. "I would wake up in the mornings and sing out into the fields," she says, "then go into the towns for auditions." In the past three years, she has been a regular at the Zurich Opera and has sung at the Vienna Opera and Covent Garden.

Where the Work Is. She long ago gave up on the U.S. as a place to live, and even her toast-of-the-town success in California is not likely to tempt her back from her home in Zurich. "People stare at me in Europe," she says, "but out of curiosity. When I come back here, the stares have a malice in them. Besides, my life is in the opera now, and Europe is where the work is."

PETE PETERS

SOPRANO GRIST
May wine in the throat.

SOPRANOS

"Absolutely Priceless"

The reviews that greeted Soprano Reri Grist in her debut with the San Francisco Opera company might well have been written by her mother. She was an "exquisite" Rosina in The Barber of Seville, an "absolutely priceless" Despina in Così Fan Tutte, "the very incarnation" of Sister Constance in Dia-

Howard Voted Most V

ELSTON HOWARD

By Tommy Holmes
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

Ralph Houk, now a man behind an executive desk, knows that almost anything can happen when a committee of baseball writers pools its collective intellect to elect a most valuable player.

"This time," said the new general manager of the Yankees yesterday, "they couldn't have made a better choice. There are many reasons why Elston Howard was our solid ball player this year which I'm glad were recognized by the committee." Howard was named the American League's Most Valuable Player yesterday.

"Look at it this way. With all of our other injuries, where would we have been if something serious had happened to Howard along the way? Up the creek, that's where," Houk said.

"But Ellie hung in there. Never once did I have to take him out because he was hurt or even too tired. And he had a great year (playing 135 games and hitting .287).

In those weeks and months that Mantle and Maris were out of action, he was the most feared big hitter in our lineup and he wound up with 28 homers and 101 runs batted in.

"And if that isn't enough, there was the great quality of his catching, more noticeable this year because he was working with more younger pitchers than is usual on our club. Anyone watching him in action ought to know that Howard is a fine receiver, but the fine pitc

Jim Bouton makes it evi great judgm ability to br in a pitcher

It is now u
Howard to

"Maybe I' already," H laugh. "I did a manager manager, di not worrying getting good get more of

This was Yankee cat present. Ho replace Roy kee general
Berra, Howa derstudy, to as manager.

And now

"We're taking nothing for granted," said Princeton's st Valuable in A. L. for '63

the fine pitching of kids like Jim Bouton and Al Downing makes it evident that he has great judgment, too, and the ability to bring out the best in a pitcher."

It is now up to Houk to sign Howard to a 1964 contract.

"Maybe I've said too much already," Houk said with a laugh. "I did sound more like a manager than a general manager, didn't I? But I'm not worrying about that. He's getting good money and he'll get more of the same."

This was quite a year for Yankee catchers, past and present. Houk moved up to replace Roy Hamey as Yankee general manager, Yogi Berra, Howard's summer understudy, took Houk's place as manager.

And now Howard winds up with the American League's Most Valuable Player award —easily, as it turned out.

All 20 baseball writers on the committee named him on the ballot and 15 put him on top. His point total of 248 was 100 points higher than that of Al Kaline of the Tigers, who finished second. Whitey Ford was third with 125 points and three first-place votes.

The lone remaining first-place vote went to Tom Tresh, the Yankee outfielder who finished 11th in the point count. Anyway, Yankees drew 19 of 20 first-place votes, a tribute to their easy pennant victory in spite of a distressing list of injuries.

Mickey Mantle, M.V.P. of 1962, and Roger Maris, winner in 1960 and 1961, failed to gain a point on any ballot. Chances are that one or the other would have been named most valuable ball player this year had the election been held by members of the American Medical Association.

The success of the Yankees up to the time they faced the Dodgers in the World Series was generally called a team effort.

"Without the help of my teammates," said Howard in his new home at Teaneck, N. J., "there was no possible way I could have won this award. Jim Bouton, Tony Kubek, Hector Lopez, Tom Tresh, Joe Pepitone—they all had great years. Whitey Ford had a truly fine year and I figured he'd be right in the running for it.

"But I do think this was the about the best season I've had," continued the 32-year-old catcher. "I consider it a real solid year, better than 1961 (when he hit .348) because this year I got so many key hits.

Howard's 28 homers was a personal high. He admitted he was disappointed in failing to reach 30, the record for an American League catcher shared by Berra and Gus Triandos.

"Perhaps I was pressing too hard in the final week," he admitted. "Even so, I hit two triples at Yankee Stadium which would have been home runs anywhere else."

The Yankees have won four straight Most Valuable Player awards and eight of the last 10.

Associated Press Wirephoto

GRADUATING SPEED — Wilma Rudolph, world-record holder for the 100-and-200-meter dashes and 1960 Olympic sprint champion, holds the diploma awarded her yesterday at commencement exercises at Tennessee A. & I. State University. She is uncertain whether she'll continue her athletic career.

'Gone Are the Days!'—Laughter-Laden Lesson

TRANS-LUX EAST THEATER

A screenplay by Ossie Davis, based on his play, "Purlie Victorious;" directed and produced by Nicholas Webster, presented by The Hammer Brothers. Running time: One hour and 30 minutes. With the following cast:

Lutiebelle .....Ruby Dee
Purlie Victorious .....Ossie Davis
Captain Catchipee .....Sorrell Booke
Gitlow .....Godfrey Cambridge
Missy .....Hilda Haynes
Charlie Catchipee ..... Alan Alda
Idella .....Beah Richards
Sheriff .....Charles Welch
Deputy .....Ralph Roberts

By Judith Crist

Purlie Victorious is back and if you missed seeing this latter-day prophet on stage —or want to re-relish the goings on in Ol'Cap'n Cotchipee's cotton patch—you must see "Gone Are the Days!"

Ossie Davis' outrageous and zany fable has been brought to the screen almost intact, with, in fact, only one major cast change, and no change in the riotously comic fantasy that glitters with the sparks of its sub-surface fury. Its impact is, perhaps, even greater as a film, so rarely the vehicle for sophisticated satire on so "delicate" a subject as that of Negro rights.

As Purlie himself notes, "Great leaders are bound to pop up from time to time among our people," and he is a self-appointed leader, addlepated and rhetoric-sated, besotted by schemes for bringing his people to freedom, primarily through establishing an integrated church.

Ruby Dee is the Topsy-like ingenue of "Gone are the Days!"

The scheme for getting $500 from Ol' Cap'n involves Topsy-like Lutiebelle, a deliciously unadvanced thinker who prides herself on her perfections as a sleep-in ("I'm a great one for race pride—only I don't need it much in my line of work"); his brother, Gitlow, newly appointed Deputy for the Colored and Uncle Tom Supreme to the Cap'n ("Yassuh, boss, you is de boss, boss"); his militant sister-in-law ("Oh child, being colored can be so much fun—if no one's looking") and the Cap'n's not very bright son, a dedicated integrationist ("You trying to get non-violent with me, son?" the Cap'n demands).

As they plot and plan and cavort, every cliche of Negro-white relations is explored and exposed, every raw nerve and tenacle of guilt probed—but the hilarity mounts, the comedy is wildly sustained. Ossie Davis is an angry man but one with the wit, the wisdom and the inspiration to give his anger potency.

His is a topsy-turvy world, wherein we become slowly aware of the Negroes' tolerance of the foibles and failures of the whites, and their condescensions become a parable bristling with contemporary truths. And the overlay of laughter serves to bring these truths home with startling efficiency. Idella, the Cap'n's no-nonsense housekeeper, emerges as the essential protector of his well intentioned son; Gitlow gives the Cap'n true surcease as he croons "Old Black Joe" by his side.

The New Movie

The performances are superb. Mr. Davis' Purlie is as silver-tongued and glow-eyed as one could wish. Ruby Dee, one of the loveliest actresses around, is simply delicious and Godfrey Cambridge, a master satirist, gives you Gitlow to the last cringe. Beah Richards, as the firm-handed Idella; Sorrell Booke, as the Old South himself, and Alan Alda, as the aspiring New South, are flawless. The newcomer to the cast, Hilda Haynes, as the sister-in-law, is a pillar of warm strength.

As a movie, "Gone Are the Days!" is penny-pinched around the edges and there has been little visual expansion of the play. It is relatively static, over-given to oratory. But the oratory is well worth it; the opportunity to watch top performers in close-up and the delights of Henry Cowen's musical score are on the plus side. It matters not if it is little more than a filmed stage play. It's a delightful entertainment—and a laughter-laden lesson for our times.

school graduates let the music school know what had become of them last year, it was no disappointment to Bain that only 57 were professional musicians. Of the other 891, no fewer than 713 are teachers of music.

TEACHING

Desegregated History

"When I was going to school," recalls Author James Baldwin, "I began to be bugged by the teaching of American history, because it seemed that that history had been taught without cognizance of my presence." Baldwin's figurative forebears go back at least to 1513, when 30 Negroes sailed to the New World with Balboa. Yet the most widely used eighth-grade history text in the country today mentions only two Negroes by name as having lived since the Civil War, brushes off the Emancipation Proclamation in two sentences. Belatedly, educators are coming to see that it is high time to desegregate the teaching of U.S. history.

Last year in Detroit the elementary schools (47% Negro) began supplementing courses with a 52-page paperback on Negro history that ranges from ancient times to Martin Luther King. Last week the schools of Washington, D.C. (86% Negro) introduced The Negro in American History, a 130-page teacher's guide that can be drawn on by all grades and read by eleventh-graders as part of their regular course. Armed with a rich bibliography, it brings out that:

▶ The biggest slave-trading American colonies were not Southern but Northern—Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island.

▶ The first American casualty against the British was a Negro—Crispus Attucks, a runaway slave killed in the Boston Massacre of 1770.

▶ George Washington barred Negroes from the Continental Army until the British began recruiting slaves. Alarmed, the Americans then enlisted more than 5,000 Negro soldiers, used them in integrated units.

▶ Contrary to folklore, slaves hated slavery so passionately that thousands joined bloody revolts. The biggest was led in 1831 by Nat Turner, a Virginia slave preacher, whose rebels killed 60 whites before he was captured and hanged. Also contrary to folklore, the U.S. had 488,000 free Negroes by 1860, almost half of them in the South.

▶ The first successful suit in the U.S. against school segregation occurred not in the South of the 1950s but in Boston in 1849.

▶ In the Civil War, more than 210,000 Negroes fought in the Union army and navy, won 20 Congressional Medals of Honor. More than 38,000 Negro soldiers were killed in 449 battles.

▶ Negroes contributed key inventions to 19th century U.S. industrialization —for example, the mechanical laster that revolutionized shoe manufacturing.

CULVER PICTURES

DEATH OF CRISPUS ATTUCKS
A grim tale of isolation.

Granville Woods, holder of 150 patents, developed the third rail for electric trains in 1890, as well as induction telegraphy for communicating with trains in motion.

▶ The first Negro to serve a full term in the U.S. Senate (1875-81) was able, cultivated Blanche K. Bruce, son of a white Virginia planter and a slave, who was educated by a tutor, escaped to the North, studied at Oberlin College, and after the Civil War became a Mississippi planter.

▶ The first American woman to earn more than $1,000,000 on her own was "Madame" J. C. Walker, a St. Louis laundress who in 1905 developed a "hair conditioner" that created "a new world for Negro women in America."

▶ The first American who actually reached the North Pole (1909) was Matthew Henson, a Negro who accompanied Admiral Robert E. Peary.

▶ West Point graduated its first Negro in 1877 (but no Negroes got through Annapolis until 1943).

▶ In World War II, the Red Cross at first refused to accept blood from Negro donors, and later took it only on a segregated basis. Ironically, it was a Negro, Plasma Expert Charles R. Drew, who set up U.S. blood banks.

As the new text notes, the four-century history of the American Negro is a grim tale of "enforced isolation from the mainstream of American life." That a few remarkable Negroes have nonetheless managed to write "a record rich in achievement" does not balance the unhappy fact that most have not. Yet now the isolation is breaking down; Negroes may see that color is disappearing as an excuse as well as a barrier. Washington's history students may well conclude, as a top official hopes, that "there is no telling what a young Negro of today can do."

Wide, Wide World of Books

From Nowhere to Household Name: The Colored Player and Baseball

Of the 500 players on the 20 major-league baseball teams last year, 75—15 per cent—were colored. Fifty-one were colored Americans, 24 were colored Latin Americans. Five had been batting champions of their leagues, six had been rookies of the year, six had been named most valuable player. They included such household names as Willie Mays of the San Francisco Giants, Elston Howard of the New York Yankees, Henry Aaron of the Milwaukee Braves, and Bill White of the St. Louis Cardinals.

The colored player is such an integral part of the game that it is difficult to realize that only 17 years have passed since Branch Rickey brought Jackie Robinson to the Brooklyn Dodgers as the first Negro to play in the major leagues. It was a daring and difficult experiment at the time, but after the initial move most other teams lost little time in following Rickey's example.

Mr. Robinson

How is the colored player faring in the major leagues? What does he think of his situation? Robinson attempts to assess these questions in Baseball Has Done It (Lippincott; 216 pages; $2.95), a collection of interviews with some colored players now active in baseball, some who were among the first to play in the major leagues, and with some white players and managers involved in the experiment. His conclusion: Integration in baseball has come a long way, but is still a long way from completion.

Low Pay and Long Rides

The first section of the book briefly describes the players' life in the old Negro leagues: the low pay, the long bus rides to cities as far apart as Newark, N.J., Kansas City, and Birmingham, living and eating in segregated quarters. Then came Robinson and the original antipathy of many fans, sports writers, and players.

This antipathy was foreseen by Dodger general manager Rickey, who disguised his early interest in colored players by telling his scouts and fellow clubowners that he intended to establish a Negro league, then carefully prepared the Dodgers for Robinson's arrival. There was, of course, some grumbling on the team, and an abortive petition presented to Rickey by the players when they first heard of the general manager's intentions.

Among the leaders of that revolt, Robinson says, were Bobby Bragan and Dixie Walker, both Southerners, now the manager and batting coach respectively of the Milwaukee Braves. Yet both are consummate baseball professionals and fair-minded men. Walker was among the first to accept and aid Robinson; Bragan's name constantly turns up later in the book in the accounts of younger players as one of the most helpful and sympathetic to colored players.

In the years since Rickey's move, great progress has been made. Colored players are accepted by fans and teammates alike; the major league clubs have steadily integrated their training facilities in Florida. Yet all those colored players interviewed—among them Howard, White, Aaron, Jim Gilliam of the Dodgers, the Minnesota Twins' Vic Power and Earl Battey, Ernie Banks of the Chicago Cubs, the Cleveland Indians' Leon Wagner—are constantly aware that this acceptance often doesn't extend past the baseball park.

'Purity of Little Children'

But they are also aware of the great benefits baseball has brought them in terms of money and social status, benefits unknown to many of their race. Bill Bruton, now with the Detroit Tigers and formerly a start for Milwaukee, recalls the time he was refused a motel room in southern Wisconsin because of his race, only to have a vacancy suddenly materialize when the owner, a fan, recognized him. "Baseball is, after all, a boys game, and children are innocent," Bruton comments. "So even adults who are prejudiced revert to their childhood when they encounter a baseball player, and they react with the purity of little children."

Despite their assumption that the colored player is now accepted in baseball for his ability, most believe that there is progress still to be made. Some, such as Wagner, contend that they've been underpaid until recent seasons; most complain about their lack of opportunity to enjoy the fiscal benefits of product endorsement and radio and television shows, which are lucrative for white stars; all look to the time when Negroes will manage, coach, and umpire in the major leagues.

Campanella's Comments

The comments of Roy Campanella, the former Dodgers' catcher who was crippled in an auto accident, are probably typical. "We thought we were accomplishing a lot when we integrated baseball. . . . but we didn't even scratch the top of the cake. If every Negro in the United States could live as we did in the National League what a country this would be!" Despite the discrimination that still exists in the major leagues, colored players are still much better off than most other Negroes. "Nowadays the Negro that has the opportunity to play major-league baseball, he knows all he has to do is act like a gentleman and have the ability," Campanella concludes. "If there's something wrong he can speak up whenever he sees something's wrong and not get crucified for it."

—JAMES R. DICKENSON

1964

HERE THIS WEEK

Shirley Verrett: Critics' Favorite

By DICK GRAY
Journal-Constitution Music-Art Editor

Shirley Verrett, American mezzo-soprano who will star in this week's opening of the Spring Concert Series at Clark College, has won probably more and wilder acclaim than any other young singer to emerge in recent years.

Ever since she created a surprise sensation at the Spoleto Festival in Italy in 1960, she has drawn ovations and critical praise everywhere she has appeared.

She has become a favorite with many prominent conductors, including Leonard Bernstein, Josef Krips, Thomas Schippers and Leopold Stokowski — who called her "a great artist."

Bernstein chose her as soloist with the New York Philharmonic during the opening week of new Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center in 1962, and Stokowski selected her as soloist for his historic return to the Philadelphia Orchestra.

AFTER HER formal debut last November in Philharmonic Hall, the New York Herald Tribune critic wrote:

"From every conceivable standpoint — plus a few that have yet to be conceived — Shirley Verrett's debut recital was an absolute triumph. Any lingering doubts about Miss Verrett's place among the world's great singers may now be put to rest; her place is among the foremost of this or any other age."

Miss Verrett will perform

SHIRLEY VERRETT
At Clark With Symphony

with the Atlanta Symphony Thursday and Saturday nights. Friday night, the Symphony will appear alone. Henry Sopkin will conduct. All concerts will begin at 8:15 p.m. in Davage Auditorium.

The public can call the Clark publicity office, JA. 4-2788, to obtain tickets. Should any remain or be returned, they will be available at the door.

Thursday, Miss Verrett will sing Mahler's "Songs of the Wayfarer." The orchestra will play Wagner's Prelude to Act III of "Lohengrin," Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and Copland's "Rodeo."

Friday, the orchestra will perform Benjamin's "Overture to an Italian Comedy," Franck's Symphony in D Minor, Rimsky-Korsakov's "Capriccio Espagnole" and Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice."

Saturday, Miss Verrett will sing three arias from Bizet's "Carmen"; "Letter Scene" from Massanet's "Werther"; "Mon Coeur s'Ouvre a ta Voix" from Saint - Saens' "Samson et Delilah," and "O Don Fatale" from Verdi's "Don Carlo." The orchestra will play Rossini's "La Scala de Seta", Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony" and Bizet's "Carmen Suite."

Associated Press wirephoto

KEEPING HIS AVERAGE UP—Manny Newsome may be the nation's leading basketball scorer with an average of 33.5 for 13 games, but he must hit the text books to keep his scholastic average a lot higher. The Western Michigan senior from Gary, Ind., has already scored 400 this season.

Associated Press wirephoto

PARDON MY REACH—Baltimore's Si Green throws his arms around Wilt Chamberlain as the two battle for ball under the Warrior basket in the second period of yesterday's game at Baltimore. San Francisco won, 120-118, in overtime.

ALDON SIMS IS EAGLE SCOUT

Aldon Sims Jr., 15, son of Mr. and Mrs. Aldon Sims, has achieved his eagle scout rank. He is in the 10th grade at Harper High School. His scout master is F. D. Hammond.

Senator in Court

During arguments on the Atlanta school desegregation case Tuesday in the U.S. Supreme Court, the justices addressed NAACP lawyer Constance Baker Motley of New York as "Senator Motley."

Mrs. Motley, well known in Atlanta because of her participation in civil rights cases there for several years, is now a member of the New York State Senate. She was elected in a special election several weeks ago to fill a vacancy.

She is the first Negro woman to serve in the New York Senate

• The Cincinnati Royals' Oscar Robertson, named the most valuable player in the National Basketball Association, was the only unanimous choice on the NBA's all-star team, which was chosen by sportswriters and broadcasters who cover the league. Other members of the team were Elgin Baylor and Jerry West of the Los Angeles Lakers; Bob Pettit of the St. Louis Hawks, and Wilt Chamberlain of the San Francisco Warriors. Robertson's teammate, Jerry Lucas, was chosen as the league's rookie of the year.

2 Negro Girls Here Win Art Prizes

Two Atlanta teen-age Negro girls were among the 17 American winners in the annual India-sponsored International Children's Art Competition.

Some 60,000 young people from 65 nations took part in the contest. There were 329 prizes awarded by the Indian government.

The Atlanta girls are Rita Maddox, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Maddox, 737 Jones Ave., NW, and Cecelia Perrin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Perrin, 825 Beckwith St., SW.

Negro Woman Wins Seat in N.Y. Senate

NEW YORK, (AP) — Constance Baker Motley, the attorney who represented Negro James Meredith in his successful fight to attend the University of Mississippi, Tuesday night became the first Negro woman to win a seat in the New York state Senate.

Mrs. Motley polled 3,555 votes to 2,261 for Republican Thomas G. Weaver in the Harlem-West Side 21st state Senate district. Weaver also is a Negro.

Mrs. Motley is an associate counsel of the legal defense and educational fund of the NAACP.

The election was called to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of state Sen. James L. Watson, a Democrat and Negro, upon his election last fall as a civil court judge.

its share of individual stars.

▶Rafer Johnson, the dignified UCLA graduate student, lost seven of ten decathlon events to C.K. Yang of Nationalist China, but scored so heavily in the weight events—shot put, discus, and javelin—that he set an Olympic record of 8,392 points. Yang (8,334) finished second, Russia's Vasily Kuznetsov (7,809) third. "I'll never go through it again," said Johnson afterward.

▶Don Bragg, the man who wants to play Tarzan, pole-vaulted 15 feet 5⅛ inches, 6 inches above the previous Olympic record, then celebrated his victory with a chest-thumping jungle yell.

▶Wilma Rudolph, who earlier had won the 100-meter dash, went on to sprint home first in the 200-meter dash, then anchored the championship U.S. 400-meter relay team. No American woman had ever before won three gold medals in track and field.

Big Principle

Wichita (Kansas) Eagle

AN ITEM found buried in an Iowa paper couldn't compete with the headlines about the Estes scandals and stockpiling excess profits, but it deserves more attention than it got.

Municipal Judge Glanton of Des Moines, a Negro jurist of high repute, was chosen a few months ago by the United States State Department to represent the United States on a four-month speaking tour in Africa and the Far East. He was paid $700 a month by the Federal Government and continued to draw his regular salary as a judge.

After expenses he found that he had cleared $492 above his regular salary. So he returned the money to Polk County (Des Moines) with the comment: "I feel I have a moral obligation not to make a profit from the trip."

A small amount, but the principle was big.

HERB SCHARFMAN

RUSSELL V. CHAMBERLAIN
Points at a premium.

John McCone, Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, who shuns the limelight, had his reputation enhanced at the White House with his early reporting and correct appraisal of the Soviet buildup in Cuba. Some White House advisers argued that the Russians would not dare base nuclear missiles in Cuba, and held to their positions until photographic evidence proved them wrong.

★ ★ ★

The White House is pictured as being not at all happy with the situation at the University of Mississippi, where several hundred troops and a substantial number of U. S. marshals are having to be maintained to keep James Meredith, a Negro, enrolled. Questions are being asked about exactly what is being proved by demonstrating that the U. S. Army can carry out "token" integration of a university.

★ ★ ★

Orville Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture, is likely to go to Congress with a watered-down bill for control over grain farmers. A Kansas race on the clear-cut issue of rigid Government management of farm output brought victory for the Republican.

★ ★ ★

Hustling into Manhattan to accept the Heisman Trophy, Ernie Davis, 22, the first Negro ever to be chosen as football's "outstanding college player," got his hand shaken by President Kennedy, was gang-tackled by emissaries of a Canadian pro team and both U.S. professional leagues, each of which has made him its top draft choice. By opting for the National Football League, the thumping Syracuse University halfback could probably share with Michigan State's Ron Hatcher the distinction of being the first of their race to play for the Washington Redskins. But for Ernie this was at best a side issue. Grumped he: "I wish they

UPI

ERNIE DAVIS
Never mind the race.

Associated Press

The Falgout's skipper Gravely

Appointed: Lt. Comdr. SAMUEL LEE GRAVELY Jr., 39, Virginia-born Navy veteran of World War II and the Korean War; as the first Negro commander of a U.S. warship (the destroyer escort Falgout); announced by the Navy, Feb. 1.

Scores a First

Associated Press

Jacquelyne Faye Evans, a 15-year-old junior at Little Rock's Hall High School, has been inducted into the National Honor Society. She is the first Negro student to be so honored at a formerly all-white Little Rock school. Miss Evans achieved an A-plus average and is doing accelerated work in algebra and English.

Opposes Urging Voter Turnout

The Editors: It is my belief that your editorials urging people to "get out and vote" are a detriment to our country and to our state.

The patriotic, intelligent and informed voter who understands today's issues will vote even if he has to crawl to the polls on his hands and knees. No one has to tell him of the importance of his vote.

Why should his vote be nullified by such ignorant and idiotic voting as, for instance, "of course I'm for Kennedy; Jackieboy is so cute and I don't like Nixon's nose," or "That's the way my Pappy voted; that's the way my Grandpappy voted; and that's the way I vote; what was good enough for my Grandpappy is good enough for me."

Haven't we been bumbled into three unnecessary wars and aren't we being bumbled into a fourth as a result of ignorant and idiotic voting?

And isn't ignorant and idiotic voting responsible for a national debt so large that the nation is on the verge of bankruptcy?

H. A. McMORROW.

Rome.

Willie Caught His Passes Well, and Now He's a Hero

It was Willie's day in Jackson, Miss., and the town made the most of it. There was a parade for him on Capitol Street, a crowd of more than 700, and words of praise from Mayor Allen Thompson.

For Willie, it was the greatest moment of his life. For others, accustomed to hearing of nothing but Mississippi's fight against integration, it was an unusual scene.

Willie is Willie Richardson, a Little All American football player for Jackson State College, a Negro school. The celebration on Jan. 14 was Jackson's way of showing how much it appreciated the 22-year-old Greenville, Miss., athlete who, in Mayor Thompson's words, has "brought so much good to Mississippi."

Richardson caught 43 passes, 8 of them for touchdowns, in leading his team to the Southwest Athletic Conference championship last fall and a 22-6 victory over Florida A&M in the Orange Blossom Classic at Miami.

Added Mayor Thompson in his public praise of Richardson: "You have many responsibilities, the biggest of which is as a representative of the state of Mississippi."

Said a Negro educator: "It was a very significant step" in the state's racial relations.

Negro Right to Vote Wins Again

The amount of energy that litigious Southerners expend in trying to deprive qualified Negroes of the right to vote passes understanding.

Take for instance the case of 54 Negroes in Macon County, Ala., where the Federal District Court found last year that discrimination had been proved and issued an injunction ordering fair treatment. So the 54 Negroes were registered, along with a great many others. But the State of Alabama nevertheless continued to contest on the ground that the Civil Rights Act merely prohibited discrimination in general, without any authorization for orders on specific voters.

Here the Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the original decision, but Alabama's Attorney General persisted to the Supreme Court and once more met defeat. There was just a one-sentence unanimous ruling which noted a previous decision elsewhere, as much as to say that the nine Justices saw no need to hash over something already determined.

Thus the Macon County Negroes are separately and individually affirmed in their right to vote. It took four years from the time the suit was started, and in actual practice the county's Negro and white registrants are now about equal in number. Which goes to show that Alabama, by resisting the inevitable, has behaved with more stubbornness than sense.

Cincinnati Star Signs Pro Pact With Royals

Associated Press

Oscar Robertson

CINCINNATI, Sept. 18 (UPI)—Oscar Robertson, a three-time all-America at the University of Cincinnati, today signed with the Cincinnati Royals of the National Basketball Association. The contract is for three years.

Robertson, who holds the collegiate scoring record (2,963 points in 88 games), signed for an undisclosed sum. The Royals said only that part of the contract contained "some fringe benefits."

"I'm pretty well satisfied with the contract," Robertson said.

He indicated it was the best offer from several sources. Robertson will join the Royals at Lima, Ohio, Tuesday en route to an intrasquad game that night.

Bob Boozer, who along with Robertson returned last Friday from playing in the Olympic Games in Rome, also was expected to sign with Cincinnati.

HANK AARON
Beats Out Willie Mays

BASEBALL — Hank Aaron of the Milwaukee Braves edged Willie Mays of the Giants in winning his second National League slugging championship and Harmon Killebrew of the Minnesota Twins captured his first American League title.
the Milwaukee Braves sent outfielder Don Dillard and first baseman Lou Klimchock to the minors and sold utility infielder Amado Samuel to the New York Mets.

PICTORIAL PARADE

PHILIP & GLOBETROTTERS
Up with royal cunning.

Negro Envoy to Replace Murrow as USIA Boss

WASHINGTON (AP)—Edward R. Murrow has resigned as director of the U.S. Information Agency. President Johnson on Tuesday named Carl Rowan, now ambassador to Finland, to replace Murrow in the $21,000-a-year post.

Rowan, 38, former newspaperman and author of four books, will thus become the highest ranking Negro in government and the first of his race to sit in on meetings of the National Security Council.

The USIA director is not a member of the council, but it is accepted practice for him to attend all sessions.

Murrow, facing a long convalescence from lung cancer surgery, wrote Johnson, that it was his duty to step down.

Johnson, in his reply to Murrow, said he "will be sorely missed," had "done a magnificent job" and would be called upon for advice and help in the future.

Gordon Parks, a Negro born in the border state of Kansas—neither north nor Deep South—spent a large part of his life fighting for a place in the white world. He won that place and became a famous photographer, a member of LIFE's staff. Now he has turned to writing and has produced his first novel, a violent and perceptive fictional autobiography.

Black

His novel, The Learning Tree (Harper & Row), tells how it feels to grow up a Negro boy in America. On a recent visit home Parks took the photographs on these pages to evoke the book's mood; the little boy above, running for safety before a line storm, might be Parks himself, age 12. The novel ends while the hero is still a boy, but on the pages following his color pictures, Parks tells some of the things that happened to him in real life afterward and are still happening to him now.

, 1960.

Title in Experts' C

INDIANA: Earl Faison will bolster the Hoosier line as defensive end. Much is expected from sophomores on squad.

IOWA: Joe Williams supplies speed and drive at fullback

'Never Again,' Says Johnson

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 7 (AP)—"I have but one goal in my life," Rafer Johnson once said, "—to live like an American."

Today, by virtue of a superhuman victory in the Olympics decathlon at Rome, he stands officially recognized as the finest all-around athlete in the world.

"I wanted this one real bad," the 6-foot-3, 200-pound Negro said after the grueling two-day competition in 10 track and field events ended Tuesday. "I never want to go through that again—never."

It is only one of many honors—from civic and sports groups and fellow students—that have come to the 26-year-old athlete from Kingsburg, Calif.

Gentle in manner, soft-spoken, fluent of mind and speech, Johnson was a highly popular student leader at UCLA. Three times he was elected president of the student body.

Fellow athletes of the U.S. Olympic team chose him to bear the Stars and Stripes into the Olympic Stadium. Johnson was the first Negro flag bearer for a U.S. team.

"We thought Rafer represented the best in Americanism," said Louis J. Wilke of Bartlesville, Okla., a member of the U.S. Olympic executive board.

"To most of the guys on the team he represents perfection," said hurdler Lee Calhoun of Gary, Ind.

During a rehearsal for the ceremonial opening parade, other flag bearers dipped their banners in salute as they passed the president's box. Not Rafer.

"We don't drop the American flag," he explained later.

NURSE IS "QUEEN FOR A DAY"

Hollywood—For the sixth consecutive year, the nursing profession was honored on ABC-TV's "Queen for a Day." Mrs. Eglantine Payn, a registered nurse from Orthopaedic Hospital in Los Angeles, was selected "Queen for a Day" by the audience. With Mrs. Payn are shown (from left) Dr. Leonard Asher, chairman of the Los Angeles County Medical Association's Committee for Television and Radio; Dr. William F. Quinn, who originated the idea for the annual "Queen for a Day" nursing show; Dr. Dudley M. Cobb, Jr., vice chairman, Physicians Advisory Committee, American Medical Association; Jack Bailey, program emcee, and Dr. Eugene F. Hoffman, chairman of the AMA committee.

NEGRO QUEEN OF COEDS

At Indiana University, Nancy Streets, 19-year-old Negro, was crowned campus beauty queen by Anita Marie Hursh, last year's Miss Indiana. Nancy won the title over 14 white coeds.

If De Gaulle Resigns, Negro Will Replace Him

By BERNARD KAPLAN
North American Newspaper Alliance

PARIS, Oct. 20 — If President Charles de Gaulle resigns, as he threatens to do unless a decisive majority of Frenchmen support him in the Oct. 28 referendum, his—at least temporary—successor will be a Negro.

The French Constitution provides that power must be passed on to the president of the French Senate, Gaston Monnerville, 65, who is a native of Cayenne, French Guiana. Monnerville would be the first non-white politician to hold the highest office in France.

PUBLIC OPINION polls estimate that only 43 per cent of the French electorate is outright for De Gaulle, while 11 per cent are as yet undecided how they will vote in the referendum, which would change the French Constitution so that the president could be elected by a direct vote.

This makes it a possibility that the 60 per cent which De Gaulle is understood to consider his "decisive majority" may elude him.

Monnerville, a veteran Socialist, is not generally considered to be the man to fill De Gaulle's shoes permanently. No one seems aware of this more than Monnerville himself.

Nonetheless, he displays no outward hesitancy about the prospect of taking over if the cards fall that way. Indeed, his has been one of the loudest voices denouncing the referendum as "illegal" and demanding De Gaulle's proposal for the direct election of the next president be voted into oblivion.

A WARTIME resistance fighter whose relations with De Gaulle had been cordial enough to allow him to remain head of the upper parliamentary chamber (a post he has beld without interruption since 1947) when the Fifth Republic came into being, Monnerville's newly critical attitude toward the chief of state is now fully reciprocated.

(Called in for "consultations" as prescribed by the Constitution after the National Assembly had voted to overthrow the Pompidou cabinet, his interview with De Gaulle was of record-breaking brevity—just under two minutes.)

The Gaullists are confident that the prospect of power passing, even temporarily, into Monnerville's hands, will be enough to persuade many Frenchmen, however else they might be disposed, to vote to keep De Gaulle at the helm. They are campaigning on the point with posters reading "the choice is De Gaulle or Monnerville."

IF HE GOES to the Elysees Palace as interim chief of state, Monnerville is said to be planning to call on Antoine Pinay, the Independent leader and father figure of the French conservatism, to become premier. Pinay would then run for the presidency with Socialist support (Monnerville having graciously stepped aside) and, on election, offer the premiership to a Socialist, probably Guy Mollet.

Ike Wasn't Just Lucky

To the N. Y. Herald Tribune:

Mr. Alsop's column entitled "No More Russian Roulette" admits the ineptitude of the present Administration's policy with regard to our military security. But Mr. Alsop attempts to equate this bungling with the Eisenhower administration's successful maintenance of military superiority over the Russians, with the explanation that Eisenhower was just lucky.

The Eisenhower administration did not until toward the end of its term begin to make policy on the basis of what the Russians would do rather than upon what they could do, and when the former Administration did adopt the former procedure it did so because it could base its calculations upon very real evidence gathered from intelligence activities of a varied nature, including the much-maligned U-2 program which kept the Soviet Union under aerial surveillance for four good years.

There is not the slightest evidence that the Russians would have dared to install offensive missile bases under the noses of an Eisenhower-Dulles team, as they did under that of Kennedy, but there is plenty of indication that the present Administration's fumbling of policy, as in the Bay of Pigs affair, encouraged the Russians to grievously miscalculate, thus bringing us closer to a nuclear war than we ever have been.

To say that national policy has been determined by the "same parts of the government machine" and "the same individuals" under both administrations is just plain silly. Is the policy of the United States decided by underlings whom the American people never heard of, let alone voted for?

There never was a missile gap, as all responsible people now admit. And the Eisenhower administration carefully estimated the Russian strength and maintained a superior military posture. The present Administration has, through its conduct of affairs, given the Russians encouragment to strike as they have never struck before.

STEPHEN RYAN

Oneonta, N. Y.

Lucas Helps Make Royals N. B. A. Pick

(One of a series of National Basketball Association team prospects.)

By Sam Goldaper
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

After seven successive Eastern Division championships and six of the last seven N.B.A. titles, the Boston Celtics are no longer a favorite to retain their monopoly.

The prognosticators, Celtic coach Red Auerbach among them, have installed the Cincinnati Royals as the pre-season Eastern Division choice. Much of this can only be attributed to the retirement of Bob Cousy.

"I don't say that we should be the pre-season favorite," says Auerbach admitting that honor should go to the Royals but he does inject this thought: "But, I just can't see who is going to lick us—right now at least."

Since Cousy quit to become a college coach, Auerbach has been deluged with, "who will replace Cousy and will you miss him?"

By now, Auerbach, who isn't known for keeping his temper, screams at questioners, "Of course, we'll miss him and of course we cannot find anyone to take his place. We can't tell how much we'll miss Bob—as a player, as a leader and psychologically."

On the plus side, the Celtics still have Bill Russell, the game's most valuable player and the Jones boys, K. C. and Sam, are still around along with Tom Sanders, Jim Loscutoff, Dan Swartz, Tommy Heinsohn, Frank Ramsey and John Havlicek. The latter just missed being named last season's rookie of the year.

And, to top that, the Celtics grabbed Willie Naulls, the former Knick, from the San Francisco Warriors. "He's an experienced cornerman, who will give us offensive strength at that position—a weakness of ours over the last two years," said Auerbach.

The Celtics won the division title, ten games ahead of the Syracuse Nats. Cincinnati finished third but in the final forced Boston into a seven-game play-off before bowing out.

The Royals figure to go with much of the same lineup as last year plus the big addition, Jerry Lucas, three-time All-America from Ohio State and a reluctant pro. Although the Royals always owned the rights to Lucas (territorial), he refused to join them and instead chose the American Basketball League. When that folded he sat out last season.

The Royals have a new coach—Jack McMahon, who came over from the Detroit Pistons in a swap of coaches. Charley Wolf went to Detroit.

During the exhibition season, Lucas has been reluctant

OSCAR ROBERTSON
Roayls

BILL RUSSELL
Celtics

TRIPPI'S PRO REPORT

AMAZING MR. BROWN STILL DOMINATES NFL

By CHARLEY TRIPPI

The play of Jimmy Brown continues to dominate the National Football League. The Browns are off to their best start since 1958 when they won five in a row before losing their first game.

Charley Trippi

At the present rate, Brown will break the NFL's rushing and scoring record for one season. He has scored 10 touchdowns and rushed for 780 yards.

Sam Huff, the Giants' star linebacker, said this of Brown: "If he ran any harder he'd kill a few of us. Also he is waiting for his blockers to get out there so he can make use of them. He never did that before."

Giants' coach Allie Sherman said, "He's one of the few guys in football who can beat you without the ball. You have to watch him all the time. You have to change your defenses according to what he does. But you can't make a move until you see whether he has the ball."

JIMMY BROWN
Dominating the NFL

ALLIE SHERMAN
Jimmy Showed Him

SAM HUFF
'Running Over Us'

NORMAN SNEAD
Gets Razz-Berries

Speaking of other Browns, there are recurrent rumors around the league that Paul Brown, the deposed Cleveland Browns' mastermind, is headed for a West Coast pro coaching job.

It appears that when a team's offense bogs down the quarterback gets the brunt of the boos from the fans. Redskin quarterback Norm Snead, commenting on boos that peppered him a couple of weeks ago in D.C. Stadium, said, "I am an athlete and have lots of pride. Sure I hear them and I don't like it, but this football is my living. As long as we win it doesn't matter. Like after the Dallas Cowboy game. They could still be booing me on Monday and I could not care less."

Two quarterbacks, Charley Johnson at St. Louis and Frank Ryan at Cleveland, have the pros wondering if they can maintain early consistency over 14 games. If so, they will keep their teams in the running.

In the event you have aspirations of owning a pro team, here's an idea of costs in the pros. The Eagles have a player and coaching payroll of $675,000. They need to make $1,300,000 or more to avoid red ink over a season.

Receiver Raymond Berry, often called the keenest student of game films among players in the NFL, spent the last two weeks on the sidelines charting the Colts offensive play. Berry, who is out at least six weeks with a shoulder injury, gave this summation of the unbeaten Chicago Bears:

"They make no mistakes either offensively or defensively. They play conservative football, make you earn everything you get."

During the fourth period of St. Louis' 56-14 victory over Minnesota, rookie linebacker Larry Stallings hit the arm of Viking passer Ron Vander-Kelen. The result was an interception and a 21-yard return for a touchdown by veteran John Simak.

Stallings told John, "Half of those points belong to me." But after learning that it was the first touchdown in Simak's seven-year career, Stallings readily conceded all six points to the defensive backfield star.

YELLOW RIVER DRAG STRIP
Sunday, Oct. 20
SUPER STOCK
A, B, C, D Gas
Handicap Stock
COVINGTON, GA.

I'm Still Scared

By Eugene (Big Daddy) Lipscomb
as told to Robert G. Deindorfer

The huge lineman of the world champion Baltimore Colts discloses why fear has haunted his life. Here is his own surprising story of his sordid past and his hopes for the future.

I've been scared most of my life. You wouldn't think so to look at me. I'm six feet six inches tall, I weigh 283 pounds and I'm an All-Pro defensive tackle with the champion Baltimore Colts. But I still get feeling scared sometimes. Every once in a while it gets so bad I cry myself to sleep.

I don't know exactly why this is. I think part of my fear comes from being self-conscious about my size, and part of it from being alone so much. And part of it must come from my being a Negro. Whatever the actual reasons, life has been one long scare for me. The bad times stick in my head no matter how hard I try to forget them.

My worst scare came when I was eleven years old. My mother and I were living together in a rooming house on the east side of Detroit. One morning she left for work at the laundry, as usual. I was fixing myself some breakfast and getting ready to go to school when a man rapped on our door and asked whether this was the residence of Mrs. Lipscomb.

Even now I thank that man for trying to be so nice. He put his hand on my shoulder, sat me down and told me my mother was dead. She had been (Continued on Page 92)

Left: Big Daddy today. Once he was known as "Fifteen-Yard Daddy," because he was penalized so often. Below: Corporal Lipscomb of the U. S. Marines in 1953. He learned to play high-powered football in the service.

The Sports Observer

Wilt and the Warriors Take on a New Look

SAN FRANCISCO.

No one who has seen the San Francisco Warriors' Wilt Chamberlain play basketball is likely to forget it. Even among the elongated giants who populate the professional basketball world, he stands out. Towering one inch over seven feet, he is the tallest man in the league. He weighs 290 pounds, is incredibly strong, and exceptionally well co-ordinated.

He is, in the words of Warrior coach Alex Hannum, the greatest point producer basketball has ever seen. Flip through the pages of the National Basketball Association (NBA) record book and his name monopolizes the records of recent years. He has led the league in scoring for the past four years; has the highest number of total points ever scored in a season, 4,209; the highest one-season per-game average ever compiled, 50.4 points; and the highest one-game total, 100 points against the New York Knickerbockers. Last year he averaged more than 44 points a game.

Full Co-Operation From Wilt

There's a new look about Wilt this season, however. He's been passing off more and shooting less, with the result that his scoring average is down significantly from last year's to about 30 points a game. He's concentrating more on defense and defensive rebounding, never his strongest point in the past. The reason: Coach Hannum, in his first year with the Warriors, is trying for a new look for the entire team, to give it better scoring balance and defense and improve on last year's unsatisfactory record of 31 wins, 49 losses.

In this he gets full co-operation from his star. Their rapport is such that when Hannum was ejected from a game in Cincinnati last week, Chamberlain took over as acting coach and led the Warriors to a come-from-behind win over the Royals.

"We just can't win with a one-man team such as the Warriors were last year," Hannum says. "Everyone has to have confidence in his ability to score. That's why we have Wilt passing off and setting up plays so much." Hannum also has designed the Warriors' defense to keep Wilt under the basket to help out with the defensive rebounding. In the past, opposing teams have had the man being guarded by Chamberlain move out to the backcourt. This has pulled Wilt away from the backboard and cost the Warriors rebounding strength. Now, another Warrior player picks the man up and Wilt stays under the basket.

Trend To Lower Scoring

So far, the new strategy has been fairly successful; the Warriors have won about half their games and are third in the NBA Western division. The statistics reflect their record as well as their altered style; the team scoring average is down from about 126 points a game this time last year to about 100; at the same time, the defense, which was yielding 122 points a game at a comparable point in the season last year, is now giving up only about 100 points.

Wilt Chamberlain: A new duty.

In their lower scoring and tighter defense the Warriors are the leading example of this year's trend to lower scoring in NBA games. There could be several reasons for this. Many fans have been bored by the high-scoring carnivals of the past in which each team scored more than a 100 points, sometimes close to 150, in a game. Teams have been criticized for such scoring sprees. And it may be, as Hannum suggests, that teams are concentrating on defense because they need it to win. He comments:

"Some coaches are starting to realize that Boston, which has won the league championship six times in the past seven years, has also been the best defensive team," he say. "We're emphasizing it because we have to. We don't have the scoring power to win without a good defense."

Thus, Wilt Chamberlain is becoming a passer and defensive man as well as a scoring star. Says Hannum: "Wilt can be the best rebounder and defensive player in the league. In the past he's been primarily a shooter, not a completely rounded player realizing his full potential. When he does the world will never have seen anything like him." There's a good chance the world will see this completely rounded player. Alex Hannum is a very determined man. So is Wilt Chamberlain, and they're both out to win. —ELMONT WAITE

Associated Press Wirephoto

WILLIE MAYS CALLS IT 'SEVEN BALL IN THE SIDE POCKET'
And for Him, It's $105,000 in His Own Pocket After Signing New Contract

Mays Signs 1964 Pact For Reported $105,000

Cepeda Signs For $52,000

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Two of the big guns of the San Francisco Giants signed contracts Wednesday with Willie Mays receiving an estimated $105,000 for 1964 and Orlando Cepeda a boost to about $52,000.

Mays' agreement came as no surprise. Willie and the management have been amicable as his salary rose to the highest plateau in baseball history.

On the other hand, Cepeda usually has been a holdout. It was March 12 last year before the slugging first baseman came to terms.

Mays' signing could well revive the 1963 debate over whether he or Mickey Mantle of the New York Yankees receives the most money. After Willie signed a year ago, Mantle received a $100,000 pact. Stoneham then declared, "Willie is not second."

In previous years, Joe DiMaggio, Stan Musial and Ted Williams reached the $100,000 per year level.

Cepeda had held out in 1962 until he gained a $16,500 raise to $46,500. Then he slumped near the end of the pennant-winning season and the first 1963 contract offering reflected it with a cut.

The new contract is believed to call for a $5,000 boost making Cepeda the second highest salaried Giant.

The 26-year-old led the Giants with a .316 average last season. He hit 34 home runs and batted in 97.

Even with Cepeda in the fold, the Giants still have problems. Pitcher Jack Sanford and utilityman Harvey Kuenn aren't agreeable to proposed cuts from their respective 1963 salaries of $40,000 and $35,000. And Willie McCovey, who tied for the home run crown last year with 44, doesn't think his proposed raise is enough.

Negro Author Heads the USIA

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON.

Edward R. Murrow has resigned as director of the U. S. Information Agency. President Johnson yesterday named Carl Rowan, now Ambassador to Finland, to replace Mr. Murrow in the $21,000-a-year post.

Mr. Rowan, 38, former newspaper man and author of four books, will thus become the highest ranking Negro in government and the first of his race to sit in on meetings of the National Security Council. The USIA director is not a member of the council, but it is accepted practice for him to attend all sessions.

Mr. Murrow, facing a long convalescence from lung cancer surgery, wrote Mr. Johnson, in a letter dated Dec. 19, that it was his duty to step down.

"As you know," he said, "I was separated from a cancerous lung in early October. The doctors assure me the operation was successful and that recovery to date has been normal. However, it will be several months before I can resume full-time duty."

He said it would not be fair to leave USIA without a full-time director during this period.

Mr. Johnson, in his reply, to Mr. Murrow, said he "will be sorely missed," had "done

More on USIA—P 17

Herald Tribune—UPI

Edward R. Murrow

Herald Tribune—UPI

Carl T. Rowan

1st Athens Degree Awarded to Negro

By FRED POWLEDGE

The University of Georgia has awarded the first degree in its history to a Negro student.

She is Mary Frances Early of Atlanta, who received her master's diploma in music education last Friday. Miss Early attended three terms of the university in Athens to do her graduate work.

Now back at her teaching job at Atlanta's John Hope Elementary School, Miss Early said Wednesday:

"I hope that my commencement will be a beginning for others of my race who might wish to work toward advanced degrees at our state university."

MISS EARLY attended the university's commencement exercise on Aug. 16, and last Friday she received her diploma in the mail.

Two other members of her race, Hamilton Holmes and Charlayne Hunter, entered the school a few months before Miss Early. Their entrance followed a federal court order desegregating the school.

Miss Hunter and Mr. Holmes are back this year as seniors. In addition, three freshman Negro girls and one freshman Negro man are attending the school, which opened its classes on Monday.

MISS EARLY, 26, is a native of Atlanta and a graduate of Turner High School, the same school which graduated Miss Hunter and Mr. Holmes. She was graduated magna cum laude from Clark College in Atlanta in 1957 and was valedictorian of her class.

She has taught music, band and chrous at John Hope School for five years. In the summers of 1958 and 1959 she received state aid to undertake summer study at the University of Michigan.

This money was made available under a state program to assist Negroes in taking out-of-state courses which are not offered at Georgia-run schools for Negroes.

Miss Early was admitted to the University of Georgia in May, 1961, five months after the 175-year-old state-supported college dropped its racial bars to admit Miss Hunter and Mr. Holmes as udergraduates.

HER ENTRANCE was described by the school as routine, and there were no riots or disorders of the sort which accompanied the January desegregation. She started summer classes in June, 1961, with about 4,000 other students.

"My first summer," reported Miss Early, "though a lonely one, was quite successful."

She received a leave of absence from her teaching duties last March and returned to the university for the spring quarter. She completed her study at the end of the summer quarter and was awarded the master's degree in music education.

During her three quarters at the university, Miss Early received three B plusses, six As and one A plus.

"The instructors were friendly and very impartial," she said. "The students for the most part are still merely tolerant. Negro students are not yet accepted as full-fledged members of the student body, but I am very proud that no major incidents occurred during my matriculation."

Ted Lippman

A Banner Month For Negro Cause

WASHINGTON—As this is written (on Monday), it is impossible to predict what the ultimate outcome of the James Meredith-Ross Barnett clash in Mississippi will be. Whatever it is, September, 1962, the 100th anniversary month of the Emancipation Proclamation, has been a great month for the American Negro.

In Massachusetts, a Negro was invited by the Republicans to run for attorney general. In New York, a Negro was named by the Democrats to run for attorney general.

In Georgia, the segregation-at-all-cost candidate for governor was defeated by 160,000 votes. And such familiar names as Lester Maddox, Peter Zack Geer and James C. Davis were making unfamiliar campaign statements to the effect that a little integration is a pretty good thing.

In St. Louis, Maury Wills of the Los Angeles Dodgers broke Ty Cobb's "unbreakable" record of stealing 96 bases in one season. In Dallas and Cleveland, Bobby Mitchell singlehandedly tied one football game and won another for the formerly all-white and winless Washington Redskins.

* * *

A young Atlanta Negro who was a prime mover in the drive to desegregate the city's public and private facilities once said that Jackie Robinson did more for the advancement of colored people as second baseman for the old Brooklyn Dodgers than the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. ever will do as playing manager of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

A good Negro athlete can break down the thickest walls of prejudice with ease. When the Redskins played an exhibition game in Charlotte early this month, halfback Mitchell was roughed up by two white defensive backs on a pass play. The white fans of North Carolina booed the white defenders for two or three minutes.

Here's a story told as gospel in Oklahoma: Prentice Gautt, the first Negro on a Sooner football team, faced a lot of hostility from some local fans. One day when Oklahoma was playing Oregon, a native son in the stands was booing him viciously on every play.

Late in the game a Negro back for Oregon broke loose for what looked like a sure touchdown. Gautt caught him from behind and saved the game.

"Wahoo," yelled the native son. "Did you see our colored fellow catch their nigger!" This is a first step toward inter-racial respect.

If Vanderbilt and Tulane, the only private schools in the SEC, had enrolled a few fast Negro backs and giant tackles in 1954, right after the Supreme Court decision, and won a few games because of them, every other school in the conference, including (and maybe led by) Alabama and Ole Miss, would have been integrated long ago.

Tigerbelles for Rome

At the U.S. women's Olympic track-and-field trials in Abilene, Texas last week, the most conspicuous onlooker was a chunky, intense young Negro with a pencil-thin mustache, who seemed to be all over the field. Between races, he paced the infield grass incessantly. At the finish line, hands clenched, chest thrust forward, his face a mask of rigid concentration, he pantomimed the runners breaking the tape. When the trials were over, the results were surprisingly good, and the credit belonged largely to 29-year-old Edward S. Temple, coach of Tennessee State University's "Tigerbelles."

No fewer than five Tigerbelles won berths on the squad that travels to Rome next month. And with them, as Olympic coach, goes Ed Temple who, almost singlehanded, has assured the U.S. of its best female Olympic representation since 1932, when the U.S., led by Babe Didrikson, swept all but one of the six women's track-and-field events. Temple's credo: "I tell the girls, if we're gonna run, let's run. If we're gonna be spectators, then let's get up in the stands where we belong."

For Temple and his girls, the path to the 1960 Olympics has been paved with hard work and Spartan self-denial. Himself a Tennessee State sprinter until he hurt his leg, Temple took over as women's track coach after earning his master's degree in 1953 and set out to make it one of the college's top teams. He scoured the South for promising sprinters, labored successfully to increase his allotment of athletic scholarships from two to ten. A mark of his progress: at Tennessee State, primarily a top-rank basketball school (national small-college champions in 1957-59), women's track is now a major sport, men's track a minor. Temple's training methods are exacting. "We train the European way," he says. "No play; just hard work." In the months preceding last week's trials, the Tigerbelles refused dates, dieted carefully, were up at 5 a.m. each day for exhausting, lengthy workouts, went back in the afternoon for another two hours of technique polishing.

Temple's severe discipline has paid off. His girls have won the national indoor and outdoor women's championships for each of the past six years. At the trials, led by willowy Wilma Rudolph—who set a world record of 22.9 sec. in the 200-meter dash earlier this month—the Tigerbelles prompted Temple to the euphoric hope that the U.S. women might surprise the heavily favored Australians, Russians and British at Rome.

Sprinter Rudolph won both the 100 meters (11.5 sec.) and 200 meters (23.9 sec.), will anchor a 400-meter Olympic relay team composed exclusively of Tennessee State sprinters, is a good prospect for three Olympic gold medals. Tigerbelle Shirley Crowder, with an aiding wind, tied the U.S. citizens' record of 11.4 in the 80-meter hurdles, and Willie B. White, a former Tennessee State student, broad-jumped 20 ft. 4½ in. to break the U.S. record. Record-cracking Olympic trial performances by Los Angeles Housewife Earlene Brown in the discus (176 ft. 10½ in.) and shotput (50 ft. 10¼ in.) and San Diego's Karen Oldham in the javelin (163 ft. 5½ in.) demonstrated fair U.S. strength in the field events. Said Temple: "We've got a chance. We'll have to wait and see."

JOHNSON RETIRES FROM 2-DAY GRIND

Exhausted Decathlon Victor Mobbed by Well-Wishers, Including Kuznetsov

ROME, Sept. 6 (AP)—Rafer Johnson was crowned as the world's greatest amateur athlete tonight, and then announced his retirement from such competition.

"I wanted this one real bad," said the Olympic decathlon champion after a grueling two-day competition in ten track and field events in Olympic Stadium. "But I never want to go through that again—never," added the 200-pounder from Kingsburg, Calif. "I'm awfully tired."

Referring to his principal challenger, Chuan-Kwang Yang of Taiwan, Rafer said, "So's he."

"I knew I had a working margin of about ten seconds in the 1,500 meters (the last event on the program)," Johnson said when it was all over. "But I wasn't going to let Yang get away. I just wanted to stay with him and that's what I did."

Johnson told the truth. In the 1,500-meter run he stuck to Yank like a buddy in combat.

In the dressing room later the winner was mobbed by well-wishers. One of them was the third-place bronze medal winner, Vasily Kuznetsov of the Soviet Union, a former world record holder. He grabbed Johnson and kissed him on the cheek. Then they embraced and patted each other on the back.

Yank sat on a bench and wept while Johnson was being hailed. He finally struggled to his feet, a very tired man, and moved toward Johnson. Yank seized Johnson's left hand and muttered:

"Nice going, Rafe."

Associated Press Wirephoto

GOLD-MEDAL EFFORT: Rafer Johnson of the United States throwing the discus yesterday during the Olympic decathlon. Californian won the ten-event competition.

Tempe Night, an Amazing Run

University of New Mexico

Adolph Plummer, a powerful runner.

national track and field championships in St. Louis.

Plummer stands 6 feet 3 and weighs 184 pounds. His height and weight seem to be concentrated into his long legs with their huge muscles and tendons.

Hackett first saw Plummer run in the national AAU meet at Boulder, Colo., in 1959 when Plummer was a member of the Air Force team.

"Just looking at him," said Hackett, "I knew he had the physique of the greatest quarter-miler in the country."

At that time, Plummer was in his first year of track. His family had forbidden him to take part in high school athletics because a brother had been injured previously in sports. After graduation, Plummer joined the Air Force and was sent to North Africa. A friend induced him to try out for the base track team. He made it as a dash man (100-yard and 220-yard events). He toured Europe. When he was reassigned to the United States, he made the Air Force team for the AAU meet in Colorado.

Plummer chose New Mexico for his college work principally because of the manner in which Albuquerque's Indian, Spanish, and Anglo residents live in friendly interplay.

As a freshman, Plummer ran the two dash events, competing in the 440-yard run only twice.

The Psychological Factor

"You have to convince a boy mentally and physically that he is a quarter-miler," said Hackett. "A coach can tell him but he really realizes it with experience in running in the big meets."

The quarter-mile is, perhaps, the most demanding and difficult of all races. It is a race in-between—neither sprint nor run.

Hackett never pressed Plummer into devoting his time to the 440. Rather, the coach slowly built up Plummer's confidence, running him in the one-mile relay (where each of four men run a 440-yard leg).

Plummer ran anchor-position (last) legs of 44.5 seconds and 44.7 seconds (with running starts, of course). These convinced him of his speed and gave him the will to win in the 440-yard event.

Said Plummer of Hackett's philosophy: "A coach has to be part psychologist and part sociologist as well as athletic teacher."

This planning and patience set the stage for the Western Athletic Conference meet that night of May 25 in Tempe.

Looking back, Plummer said, "I am not immune to pressure yet. Tempe was ideal—the climate, the track, the crowd, the competition."

—ARCH NAPIER

Barry Goldwater

Kennedy Promise Was Cast Aside

Campaign promises are one thing; presidential requests are something else. When a man is seeking election to the highest office in the land, he is often inclined to overreach himself in telling people what he will do if elected. And while the American people don't like it, they have been conditioned over the years to expect a certain amount of discrepancy between election promise and executive performance.

But after a candidate is elected and he assumes office as President of the United States, his promises to the people take on greater importance. They are made by a man in the position to keep them if he has the desire and if great, overriding developments throughout the world do not stand in his way.

This being the case, it behooves the American people to examine closely President Kennedy's now-forgotten promise to balance the budget in the fiscal year 1963. It was made after Mr. Kennedy had taken over the reins of the federal government and had an intimate knowledge of the nation's fiscal affairs. In making it, the administration estimated a budget surplus of $500 million.

There will be no surplus of $500 million; there will be no balanced budget for the fiscal year that began July 1; but there will be a deficit.

The New York Times says a preliminary assessment by administration budget experts puts the figure at $6 billion. However, the staff of the Senate Appropriations Committee estimates that the budget deficit will run to $8.1 billion. If you take that figure and add it to the $7 billion deficit racked up for fiscal 1962, you begin to get a frightening idea of where the nation's fiscal affairs are headed under the New Frontier.

I suggest that neither the President nor any of his advisers had the slightest intention of striving for a balanced budget in the 1963 fiscal year. I believe President Kennedy's original plan, envisioning a half-billion-dollar surplus, was made solely to placate foreign governments who had begun to question the soundness of American currency. I further believe that this administration is pledged to the idea of deficit financing as a firm policy of government.

This, presumably, is the "sophisticated" approach to government finance.

We are being told almost every day by the architects of bigger deficits that the idea of a government living within its income is nothing but a "myth" which has no application in these days of change and complexity.

To the hard-working American, striving to pay his taxes and meet his family obligations without going bankrupt, this is an interesting argument. He can't help but wonder when things will become so complex and sophisticated that he will be able to run up as much debt as he wants to without being forced to repay it.

Branch Left Hanging As Crax Fall, 1-0

Indy Takes Southern Title As Ackley Fires 2-Hitter

By CHARLIE ROBERTS
Constitution Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—The Atlanta Crackers did not raise a club to help him and sharpshooting Harvey Branch couldn't win the Indian war alone.

HARVEY BRANCH
A Big Effort for Naught

'GRIFFIN, I THOUGHT I SENT YOU TO THE SHOWERS!'

Associated Press Wirephoto

HOBART TAYLOR JR.
Expert Negotiator

Hobart Taylor Named Special Johnson Aide

WASHINGTON, April 4 (AP)—Hobart Taylor Jr., a Detroit Negro attorney, will become associate special counsel at the White House, President Johnson announced today.

Taylor currently is executive vice chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. When he was vice president, Johnson served as the committee's chairman.

The job will make Taylor one of the highest ranking Negroes in the federal government.

Johnson also announced that Meyer (Mike) Feldman will become the White House's No. 1 legal officer. Johnson referred to Feldman's new assignment as "my general counsel."

White House aides explained the President was using a generic term instead of a technical one. They explained that Feldman will retain his present title of deputy special counsel, but will be the top-ranking legal official at the White House.

Johnson said he is promoting Lee White from assistant special counsel to associate special counsel. Taylor and White thus will have equal ranks below Feldman's.

White, 40, joined the White House staff early in the Kennedy administration. Before that he served as administrative assistant to Sen. John S. Cooper, R-Ky. White's home is in Omaha, Neb.

The job of special counsel has been vacant since Theodore C. Sorensen resigned to write a book about the late President John F. Kennedy with whom he was long intimately associated.

Sorensen's duties, while manifold, embraced little actual legal work.

Among other things, he was Kennedy's chief speech-writing aide and one of his key policymakers.

Johnson has not indicated whether someone else will be given Sorensen's old title.

New York Herald Tribune

Romney Plea to Negroes: Give Up Segregated Voting

By Earl Mazo
National Political Correspondent

DETROIT.

George Romney is making a novel appeal to the Negro voters of Michigan.

He is urging them to abandon their "segregated voting pattern" and extend their drive for "integration" to both political parties.

"The segregated voting pattern has led you to be taken for granted" by the Democrats, the Republican gubernatorial candidate tells Negro audiences. "This makes your political effort self-defeating."

Then he adds:

"Is segregation in the ballot box an ybetter or more defensible than segregation in any other form? Isn't it just as wrong for all members of a race to set themselves apart and to vote as a block, regradless of the merits of the candidates involved, as it would be for others to set them apart? Doesn't integration mean integration in all things?"

The effect of Mr. Romney's appeal and his determined advocacy of total civil rights is sure to be noted and carefully weighed by political strategists across the country.

Therefore the returns from Michigan's numerous Negro voting precincts Nov. 6 may well influence both parties' basic attitudes towards the civil rights issue in future campaigns.

At this point in his contest with Democratic Gov. John B. Swainson, candidate Romney's effort appears to be fruitless. Fact is, the latest polls show Mr. Romney pulling ahead and winning the governorship by virtue of gains in all segments of Michigan's voting population except one—the Negroes.

The most recent Detroit News poll, which jibes on the whole with private surveys of both parties, reports that among Negroes the spread is 88.5 per cent for the 37-year-old Democratic Governor and 10.6 per cent for the 55-year-old Republican challenger, who resigned as president of the American Motors Corp. to enter politics for the first time.

The consensus here among informed political people is that Mr. Romney's pleas for Negroes to desegregate politically simply have not caught on as yet.

On the other hand, a vigorous anti-Romney drive among Negroes appears to have been quite effective.

Gov. Sdainson seems to figure in all this only indirectly. A handsome, personable young man who lost both legs in World War II and was narrowly elected two years ago to suceed Gov. G. Mennen (Soapy) Williams, the Governor has no particular personal following or political identification except as another reliable exponent of liberal Democratic party programs. Thus his nearly unanimous backing by Negro voters is in essence pro-Democratic Party and anti-Romney.

The impact of attacks on

George Romney

Mr. Romney, which began months ago, is shown in the Detroit News poll's finding that since May, when they reached a peak intensity, he slipped a percentage point in the Negro precincts, while Gov. Swainson surged forward 6.4 per cent.

The religious issue has perhaps been one of the most potent weapons in the arsenal of Mr. Romney's foes.

Mr. Romney is a devout Mormon, and the "word" began to spread the moment he became a candidate that Mormons are anti-Negro. Most of the dirty work on this score was done subtly and under cover—and very little of it is identifiable as emanating from responsible Democratic party sources.

Typical of the religion-based attacks were a series of eight-page tracts printed on pink paper and distributed throughout Negro neighborhoods and in many Negro churches.

The lead-off diatribe of this particular series features a picture of Mr. Romney sitting in a Morman church choir and a story entitled: "Mormons teach Negro inferiority—Republicans sacrifice Negro vote with Romney."

Next came a sequel tract highlighting an article by a Negro minister which vehemently equated Mormons with "Southern racial bigots" and said, in part:

"Romney knows the doctrine of his church. He is reported to be a Mormon leader . . . He cannot pretend that the teaching of his church are unimportant without making himself a hypocrite as well as a bigot . . . He did not consider the fact of raciau equality important until he decided to become a candidate for office . . .

"Suddenly he becomes much concerned about appearing to be without prejudice. He tries to defend himself against the charge of bias by saying the real issue is not the Mormon position on race, but the Romney position. This is abusrd. The Romney position is the Mormon position, or George Romney could not be a bishop in the Mormon church. He said that he has always treated the Negro fairly. This is not the question. Many people treat dogs fairly, and are kind to them, but do not accept them as equals."

Attacks like those cut deep—and candidate Romney, while seeking to ignore their existence, had to deal with them. Therefore, in a campaign leaflet labeled "Romney and Civil Rights—the Real Story" the Republican candidate states:

"It is my firm conviction that all men are equal under God. God has said in the Holy Bible that He is no respecter of persons and that we are to judge no man.

"Under the Father of God, all mankind are brothers and I esteem every man as myself, regardless of race, creed or color.

"I am dedicated to complete religious freedom and one of my major objectives is the elimination of discrimination and human injustice politically, economically and socially."

Associated Press Wirephoto

ATLANTA NATIVE EDITH McGUIRE WINS 100-METER DASH IN U.S.-RUSSIA TRACK MEET
Wyomia Tyus of Griffin, Ga., Second Ahead of USSR's Galia Popova and Mariya Itkina

Yanks Bury the Russian Track Team; Two Georgia Girls Run 1-2 in Century

Associated Press Wirephoto

THE BUMS (L-R), TOMMY DAVIS, JOHNNY PODRES AND MOOSE SKOWRON CELEBRATE WIN

Left Fielder and First Baseman Congratulate Winning Pitcher (Center) in Dressing Room After Second Victory

Herald Tribune—UPI

UNKINDEST CUT OF ALL—Yankee catcher Elston Howard and umpire Joe Paparella watch the flight of the ball belted by the Dodgers' Johnny Roseboro in the second inning. The ball sailed into the rightfield stands, about 20 feet inside the foul pole, accounting for three runs in Los Angeles' big four-run inning.

Men to Remember

Scattered Monuments Bring to Mind Achievements of Notable Negroes

How many people know that the first man to reach the North Pole was a Negro? Or that the first building built in the area that's now Chicago was the home of a Negro fur trader and trapper? Or that the first man killed in the Boston Massacre of March 5, 1770, was not a Bostonian but a runaway slave?

Probably very few. But the tourist who travels about the United States will discover a number of relatively unknown monuments commemorating these and other Negroes who've made significant contributions to American development. A number of them are described in a recently published book, American Travelers Guide to Negro Monuments, issued by the American Oil Co.

Mr. Douglass

Some of these memorials are dedicated to well-known American Negroes, others to men who aren't so famous. Among those commemorating well-known Negroes, for instance, are:

✓ Carver National Park, just west of Diamond, Mo., the first national monument created in honor of a Negro. It contains a statue of the scientist George Washington Carver as a boy, and a museum displaying his discoveries and personal belongings.

At W. C. Handy Park: Father of "blues."

✓ A plaque in the New York University Hall of Fame dedicated to Booker T. Washington, educator and founder of Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. Washington is the only Negro honored in the Hall of Fame; his university is now an internationally known center for agricultural research and extension work.

✓ W. C. Handy Park in Memphis, Tenn., named for William Christopher Handy, the father of the blues. At one entrance to the park is a heroic bronze statue of Handy, overlooking the Beale Street he immortalized in song. The statue was dedicated in 1960, climaxing a memorial campaign that started shortly after the composer's death in 1958.

✓ The 20-room Colonial-style home of Frederick Douglass in Washington, D.C., preserved as a monument to the slave who became famous as an abolitionist and was appointed United States ambassador to Haiti in 1889.

But the book also includes monuments commemorating the exploits of lesser-known Negroes. In the Maryland State Capitol at Annapolis, for instance, hangs a plaque dedicated to Matthew Henson, the first man to reach the North Pole. As aide to Adm. Robert E. Peary, Henson was with the Arctic explorer in 1909 when he planted an American flag at the Pole. The aide actually reached the Pole first, about an hour ahead of Admiral Peary, who walked with difficulty because he'd lost most of his toes in an earlier expedition.

Mr. Henson

In Chicago, a marker on the northeast approach to the Michigan Avenue Bridge marks the site where Jean Baptiste Pointe Du Sable, a Negro fur trader and trapper, built his home—the first building constructed in the area.

In the center of Boston Common in Massachusetts, the Crispus Attucks Monument is dedicated to the victims of the Boston Massacre of March 5, 1770. Attucks, a runaway slave, was leader of a group of men who converged on the garrison of British soldiers sent to Boston to enforce the Townshend Act, and he was the first man killed by shots from the British guns.

In the colored cemetery at Columbus, Ga., a plaque erected by the city marks the grave of Bragg Smith,who died while trying to rescue the city engineer from a caved-in excavation in 1903.

Some 40 monuments or historic sites are described in the booklet, which is available free from the American Oil Co., 910 South Michigan Ave., Chicago 80, Ill.

New Revenue in Old Taxes

Every time the Iowa Legislature, now adjourned, tried to increase state revenue, the only method seemed to be to raise taxes, which the legislators didn't want to do. So the State Tax Commission decided to scout new sources of revenue. Using data processing equipment, the commission turned up the names of 100,000 Iowans who didn't pay their 1961 state income taxes. Taxes, interest, and penalties for this group will amount to $4,000,000 for that year alone.

Herald Tribune—UPI telephoto

A Negro in Our Space Program

Air Force Capt. Edward J. Dwight, 29, with his family at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. Capt. Dwight is the first Negro to be selected for possible participation in future manned space flights—which means he may become the first Negro astronaut. The Dwights' children are Eddie, six, and Tina, seven.

TRACK & FIELD

The Borrowed Pole

If it had not been for a castoff television aerial, John Pennel, 23, might be a ditchdigger today. He used to dig holes for fun on his father's farm in Tennessee. "I left holes all over the farm," he says. "I don't know why I did it. I just had this urge." Then he found an old roof top TV aerial and, using it as a sort of vaulting pole, began to go up instead of down. One leap led to another, and in 1959 he went to Northeast Louisiana State College on a pole-vaulting scholarship (room, board, tuition, $20 a month for "laundry").

The next good thing that happened to

CENTRAL PRESS

VAULTER PENNEL
Until it breaks.

Pennel was that he broke his favorite fiber glass pole during practice last March. At that point, he was an unknown; the highest he had ever vaulted was a middling 15 ft. 9 in. But on March 23, using a seemingly identical fiber glass pole that he borrowed from a rival vaulter (Rice University's Fred Hansen), Pennel soared 16 ft. 3 in. and broke the world record. He is still using that pole. Last week, at the U.S. v. Great Britain track meet in London, Pennel cleared the crossbar at 16 ft. 10¼ in., bettering his own most recent world record of 16 ft. 8¾ in., set ten days earlier.

A practitioner of the hold-on-for-dear-life, catapult-like technique of vaulting with fiber glass, Pennel used a long, 154-ft. approach "for speed," a high grip on the pole "for a bigger bend." He is aiming now for a 17-ft. vault and a gold medal in the 1964 Olympics. "I don't want to sound overconfident," he says, "but I think 17 ft. is within my reach." One little difficulty may interfere: after last week's meet Pennel noticed a crack in his borrowed pole. "I'm not going to worry," he shrugs. "I'll just keep jumping with it until it breaks."

AL's Rookie of the Year? Sorry, Downing...Not You

By Harold Rosenthal
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

Tales of Yankee disappointments are guaranted to make a big hit in such garden spots as Cleveland, Minneapolis, Boston and Chicago. Nevertheless, the Yankees could be building up to a big letdown with Al Downing.

The dandy young lefty, 5-1 with three shutouts to his credit, has been a key figure in the Yankee rotation for the past month. He was to face the Indians last night in the opener of a four-game Stadium set.

If Downing, the baby of Ralph Houk's mound staff (22 years old last month, keeps up at his present clip, the Yankees could have one of those 15-game winners emerge from nowhere.

But whatever Al does the rest of the way, the door has been slammed on any hopes he might have for rookie-of-the-year honors.

Yesterday the Yankees consulted the regulations promulgated a couple of seasons back by the Baseball Writers Association of America. To fit into the "rookie" category, a pitcher must (a) have pitched less than 45 major league innings previously and (b) have occupied a spot on a major league roster for fewer than 45 days between the cutdown date and Sept. 1.

The second specification is the killer: Al was with the Yankees 46 days in 1961.

He was called up from Binghamton July 17, 1961. So he had 15 days in July and 31 in August, and that adds up to 46. In 1961, Downing, far form ready fo rthe big time, had an 0-1 record, working a total of 10 innings.

Last year they kept him down on the Richmond farm until after the Sept. 1 roster-expanding date. He came up, worked an inning in relief, decided that the next time he got the call he'd make it stick.

The call came this May when the failure of Stan Williams and Bill Stafford to produce furrowed Houk's brow.

Downing was brought up again. He warmed up with an inning of relief against Detroit, then shut out the Senators with a two-hitter.

AL DOWNING
Two days too many in '61

His other shutouts have been against the White Sox and Athletics.

In the Chicago game he missed a no-hitter by the margin of a seventh-inning single by Camillo Carreon. The Kansas City blanking was his last previous start, July 14.

Downing is not one of those mound virtuosi, whose athletic ability is limited merely to getting a baseball over the plate. He was a fine basketball player around Trenton, a community noted for producing good hardwood performers, and he was a scholarship holder briefly at Muhlenberg.

His plans call for a degree in business administration at Rider, plus a long series of World Series cuts, and the general affluence which comes to winning pitchers on the Yankees.

But no rookie-of-the-year. He misses by two days.

Elston Howard's moving into a tie with Roger Maris for the Yankee home-run leadership (19) underscores the success the Yankee catcher has been enjoying with the 36-ounce bat. It was the heaviest stick on the Yankee bat rack on the recent road trip.

Ellie is going to try a 38-er on this home stand. . . . and is talking about the record for home runs by a catcher.

The American League mark is 30, shared by Yogi Berra and Gus Triandos, and 30 does not seem to be beyond Howard's potential. The major league mark, Roy Campanella's 41, is something else again.

Howard said that the heavier bat corrects his tendency to overswing. "That's why I'm hitting so well to the opposite field," he said.

"With the heavier bat, I'm not so likely to try to pull those outside pitches. With the extra weight, you just go with the pitch."

SPORT

Youngest Rookie

To the big-league baseball scout, the ideal pitching prospect is a sturdy six-footer who can fire fastballs all through the long, hot afternoon. Such a pitcher was Iowa Farm Boy Bob Feller, who came off a sand lot at 17 and struck out 348 batters for the Cleveland Indians in 1946. Such a pitcher also is moonfaced Michael Jones, a $3,000-bonus rookie who plays for Johnson City, Tenn., a St. Louis Cardinals class D farm club. A rangy (6 ft., 174 lbs.) right-hander with a smoky fastball, shy Mike Jones has yet another distinction: at 16, he is the youngest player in organized baseball.

Jones is drawing $4,000 a year (v. the major-league minimum of $7,000), and is already a growing legend in St. Louis, where he began his baseball career as a grammar-school nine-year-old. One day in 1958, while he was playing third base for the Brentwood Cardinals, a suburban St. Louis amateur team, the starting pitcher broke his leg, and the manager sent twelve-year-old Mike to the mound. Jones walked the first batter, struck out the next 18, won the game—and became the team's No. 1 pitcher. Over the next three seasons, he ran up such an impressive record that he attracted major-league scouts, among them a scout from the St. Louis Cardinals.

Before he could sign up with St. Louis, Jones had to get special permission from Baseball Commissioner Ford Frick, because he had not completed—or even started—high school. Classified as a "hardship case" (he was helping to support his parents and eight brothers and sisters), Jones gave his bonus to his family and headed for the Cardinals' spring training camp at Homestead, Fla., where he worked out under the watchful eye of a farm system manager, Al Unser. "He would run until he got tired," says Unser, "and then he'd quit. We finally talked him into the idea that it was necessary for him to run a little harder."

JIMMY ELLI

PITCHER JONES
All he needs is time.

In Johnson City, Coach Joe Lucco has put Jones to work in relief assignments. "Mike has a strong arm," he explains, "but we're just nursing him along. We don't let him pitch more than 70 balls at a time. Then he gets four days of rest." Object: to have Jones ready for the big league after several more seasons of seasoning. His coaches think that shy Mike Jones will make it.

UPI

SPRINTER HAYES

No booming or floating—just running.

a junior at Florida A. & M. who rarely booms and never floats. A shifty cut-and-shoot halfback on A. & M.'s football team, Robert Hayes, 20, runs the 100 as if he were cracking an enemy line: head bobbing, shoulders rolling, so pigeon-toed that he often steps on his own feet—a painful experience when he is wearing half-inch-long track spikes. "Starts are my weakness," Hayes said before last week's A.A.U. championships in St. Louis. "I don't get my top speed until I've gone 60 yds. But if I ever get a good start, I'll break a record."

In the A.A.U. semifinals, Hayes got off to the best start of his life. Rocketing out of the blocks, he leaped into the lead, gaining speed with each driving stride. The track was a special, rubberized asphalt that Hayes found to his liking. "It doesn't give like cinders," he said. "You lose about 1/10 second on cinders because your spikes dig in." As he sliced through the tape 5 ft. ahead of his closest pursuer, astonished officials huddled and checked their watches. Then they announced his time: 9.1 sec.—a new world record. To prove it was no fluke, he ran another 9.1, winning the finals—but that didn't count, because he had a favoring wind. "Aw shucks," said Bob Hayes. "I was shooting for 9 seconds flat."

Hayes, Fresh From Record, Drops the 220

By Jesse Abramson
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

ST. LOUIS.

The new Fastest Human, 20-year-old Bob Hayes of Florida, is not necessarily the strongest or hungriest, it developed yesterday in the final session of the 75th annual National AAU track and field championships. Twelve more titles were to be decided, more records likely under blue skies and perfect weather.

The 186-pound Jacksonville Jet—who sped 100 yards twice in 9.1 seconds, one of them acceptable on the spot, the other wind-aided, in retaining his American sprint crown Friday at twilight—breezed yesterday to an easy victory in his 220-yard trial heat in 21.2 around a turn.

It was, believe it or not, the slowest of five furlong tests on the spectacularly fast and maintenance-free rubber-asphalt track being used for the first time in these championships.

Whether or not our Fastest Human considered the formidable opposition—topped by the world record holder, Paul Drayton, and the unofficial new record holder, Henry Carr—Hayes indicated he would scratch from the event. Semifinals were scheduled later followed by an eight-man final.

Hayes followed the same procedure last year when he won his first National AAU 100-yard title on the first day in 9.3 seconds, then qualified behind Drayton in a 20.7 trial 220 and pulled out of the competition.

"I don't feel up to it," said Hayes.

His place on the U. S. team being selected here for the meet against Russia in Moscow next month was assured. The American coaches would have complete freedom to select Hayes to run the 200 meters in the four dual meets abroad, if they deemed him the best.

Having made the U. S. team, it's obviously a lot of torture to run three blazing 220s after 9.3, 9-1 and 9.1 hundreds the day before unless one is greedy for two sprint titles.

that the International Amateur Athletic Federation might reject the world record set on this type of all-weather track since there are no specifications for outdoor tracks. It's slightly different in mix (10 per cent rubber, 90 per cent asphalt, gravel and stone) from similar tracks already in use in many areas in this country, two in New York.

The most striking aspect besides its speed is that the track required no attention at all—raking, rolling, sprinkling or anything—after Friday's spiked-shoe action on it. It also seems to be the cheapest track that can be built, costing about $15,000.

Along with Hayes and Gilbert, a hitherto unsung young sprinter from Santa Barbara, those who claimed berths on the U. S. Team were Hayes Jones, taking his fourth national title, Blaine Lindgren, in the high hurdles; Peter McCardle and Ned Sargent, six-mile run; Brian Sternberg and John Uelses, pole vault; Dave Davis and Perry O'Brien, shotput; Ralph Boston and Darrell Horn, broad jump, and Larry Stuart and Frank Covelli, javelin throw.

Jones tied the meet record of 13.4, matching his fastest time anywhere. Lindgren posted his fastest time, 13.5. McCardle set a citizens' meet record of 28:29.2.

Sternberg's 16-4 posted another meet record and, of course, listed American record of 16.2. Uelses, the first 16-footer, who had been pushed into relatively obscurity this year, climaxed a comeback by clearing a 16-½. So did Ron Morris and Rolando Cruz (of the eleven 16-footers in action here) but Uelses earned second place on the fewest misses.

The last time Hayes equaled a world record by running 9.2 in the 100 yards in February, 1962, the record received no recognition at all. There was no wind gauge, which is essential for any record of recognition. That time, too, two watches showed 9.1.

Associated Press wirephoto

WORLD'S FASTEST HUMAN—Hayes Jones after setting record of 9.1 for 100-yard dash Friday in A.A.U. meet at St. Louis.

Hayes Credits Record Run To New Rubberized Track

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS.

Was it the track or the man in that historic 9.1 century Friday?

Bob Hayes, whose schoolmates call him Crow, gave the credit for his 9.1 seconds world mark in the 100-yard dash to the track, a good rest and the competition.

Hayes set the record Friday night in that A.A.U. semifinal, and then ran the same time 45 minutes later to win the final. The first one was good for a record, the second time was slightly wind-aided.

The 20-year-old Florida A.&M. ace, who comes from Jacksonville, praised the new rubberized asphalt track, used for the first time in the A.A.U. championships.

"The track doesn't give like other tracks. You can lose a tenth of a second on cinders," he said, "but not on this track. It's something like indoors on the boards—more flexible."

A. A. U. officials gave positive assurance before the meet the new surface wouldn't stand in the way of international recognition of records.

"I was trying for 9-flat in the final," he said. "I ran 9.3 in the prelims this morning but didn't go all out.

The thick-shouldered, thick-muscled Hayes has a 29-inch waist, stands 5-foot-11 and weighs 185 pounds. He looks more like a football back—which he is—than a track athlete.

Hayes could sign a pro football contract for a high salary, but he prefers to concentrate on the Olympics.

He runs pigeon-toed with his feet landing about 12 inches apart. Most sprinters are eight inches apart. But he has a long stride. He's a power runner who digs in and runs like a reckless halfback.

His coach, Pete Griffin, never has given a thought to changing his style, though.

Associated Press Radiophoto

ANOTHER GOLD MEDAL: Wilma Rudolph, second from right, hits tape first at end of 400-meter relay race. U. S. team won relay in 44.5 seconds. Others at line are, from left: Giuseppina Leone of Italy; Jutta Heine of Germany; Wilma, and Irina Press of Russia. Lucinda Williams, Barbara Jones and Martha Hudson were other U.S. runners.

World Speed Queen

Wilma Glodean Rudolph

SEVEN years ago, in a Clarkesville (Tenn.) high school gymnasium, a skinny, 13-year-old girl stumbled over her feet, tripped on the basketball she was trying to dribble and landed in an eighty-nine-pound tangle at her coach's feet.

Woman in the News

"A skeeter," said the coach, shaking his head. "You are a skeeter, all right. You're little, you're fast and you always get in my way." Skeeter got up and tried again. Within two years she became an all-state basketball player at all-Negro Burt High. Within five years she was a 5-foot

RUSSIAN RECORDS DRESSAGE VICTORY

Filatov First in Grand Prix Riding—Frenchman Gains in Three-Day Competition

ROME, Sept. 8 (UPI)—Sergei Filatov of the Soviet Union, riding Absent, won the Grand Prix de Dressage event of the Olympic equestrian competition today. He scored 2,144 points.

The event was held Monday and Tuesday. The results were delayed until today because of the complicated scoring system.

Gustav Fischer of Switzer-school gymnasium, a skinny, 13-year-old girl stumbled over her feet, tripped on the basketball she was trying to dribble and landed in an eighty-nine-pound tangle at her coach's feet.

"A skeeter," said the coach, shaking his head. "You are a skeeter, all right. You're little, you're fast and you always get in my way." Skeeter got up and tried again.

Woman in the News

Within two years she became an all-state basketball player at all-Negro Burt High. Within five years she was a 5-foot 11-inch young lady of charm and poise. And yesterday, after winning her third gold medal in the Rome Olympics, Wilma Glodean (Skeeter) Rudoph was acclaimed as the speediest woman in the world.

Miss Rudolph was born on June 23, 1940, in St. Bethlehem, Tenn., a tiny tobacco and corn community some forty-five miles southeast of Nashville. She is the fifth of eight children of a 73-year-old retired porter and a domestic. The family, which included eleven children by her father's former marriage, moved to a rented red-frame cottage on Kellogg Street in Clarkesville soon after Wilma was born.

4½ Pounds at Birth

In the race to her speed laurels, Wilma got off to a poor start. She was four and a half pounds at birth and her parents were not sure she would survive. At 4, Wilma was stricken with double pneumonia and scarlet fever. She lost the use of one leg.

For two years, once a week, Mrs. Rudolph would bundle her small child in a blanket and take a bus to a Nashville clinic. At 6, wearing specially constructed shoes, - Wilma could hop around on one leg. Slowly, she improved.

Then, when she was 11, one of Wilma's brothers set up a basketball hoop in the yard.

"After that it was basketball, basketball, basketball," said Mrs. Rudolph yesterday. "Whenever I'd call her in to eat or to clean up around the house, Wilma would be out in the yard having a big time."

At high school, Wilma came to the attention of C. C. Gray, the girls' basketball coach. She was a tanglefoot.

'Always Buzzing Around'

"I called her skeeter, short for mosquito. Always buzzing around," said Gray. "On the way to out-of-town games, she'd sit in the back of the school bus and tell jokes from one end of the trip to another."

In 1955 Wilma scored 803 points in twenty-five games, a record. That year, in the state tournament at Nashville, Wilma was discovered as a track prospect by accident.

Edward Temple, the women's track coach at Tennessee A. and I. State University, asked Gray to form a girls' track team at Burt so that one of the basketball forwards could be developed into a sprinter. Gray did, but the career of the forward never got out of the starting blocks. Wilma had suddenly discovered that running was even more fun than playing basketball.

Associated Press

Skeeter got up and tried again

In three years of high school track competition Wilma never lost. In summer, Gray drove Wilma to the Nashville college every day to work out with Temple. In 1957 she entered the all-Negro college.

Tennessee A. and I. is the cathedral of women's track in this country and Temple the high priest. Wilma soon became the most devoted disciple. She ran at least two hours a day while keeping up a B average in her major, elementary education, and working four hours a day in a campus office. In the summer, Temple held three workouts a day. The first was at 5 A. M.

Wilma Won and Ray Lost

Through it all, Wilma managed to have a social life, too. "Boys seem to like her, and every so often she seems to have a new one," Mrs. Temple said.

Wilma's romance with Ray Norton, the American sprinter, has been highly publicized during the Olympics. Norton, favored to win both Olympic sprints for men, finished last in each final.

Wilma seemed as unhappy over his losses as she was happy over her victories. A few minutes after she had won her third gold medal, Norton's error of passing the baton out of the zone in the 400-meter relay final caused a disqualification. Wilma cried.

In Clarksvile, however, there was only joy. Mrs. Rudolph said she was getting so many telegrams that she couldn't finish her work.

A church group collected enough money to enable her to send a cablegram of congratulations to Wilma. The Mayor made plans for a "Skeeter Rudolph" day and a local shop was exhibiting sixty-three of Wilma's medals, cups and trophies.

And Gray, who had untangled a little basketball player seven years ago, was ebullient as he confided:

"I'm coaching her 15-year-old sister, Charlene. She's going to be even faster."

Riding—Frenchman Gains in Three-Day Competition

ROME, Sept. 8 (UPI)—Sergei Filatov of the Soviet Union, riding Absent, won the Grand Prix de Dressage event of the Olympic equestrian competition today. He scored 2,144 points.

The event was held Monday and Tuesday. The results were delayed until today because of the complicated scoring system.

Gustav Fischer of Switzerland on Wald, was second with 2,078 points. Josef Neckermann of Germany was third. Henri St. Cyr of Sweden, the 1956 winner, fourth and Ivan Kalita of the Soviet Union fifth. They were the only finalists.

Patricia Galvin of Santa Barbara, Calif., was sixth with 995 points and Jessica Newberry of Ausable Forks, N. Y., twelfth with 927 points. They competed only on Monday.

Guy Lefrant of France, on Nicias, led the seventy-three entries after the dressage was completed today in the three-day equestrian event. Ib Bjorke of Denmark was second and Olle Bakander of Sweden third.

The three-day event began Tuesday, with the first of the entries going through the dressage, but no official scores were listed until tonight. The endurance test begins tomorrow, with the jumping on Friday.

Lefrant had only 70.5 penalty points. Bjorke had 73.5 and Bakander 77.5.

John Plumb of Syosset, L. I., was twenty-sixth with 120.51 penalty points. Michael Page of Briarcliff Manor, N. Y., was forty-fifth with 137.5; David Lurie of Clayton, Mo., fifty-second with 142 and Walter Staley of Mexico, Mo., fifty-sixth with 146.01.

Is He the Nearest-Perfect Player?

At 21, Vada Pinson of Cincinnati is one of the greatest center fielders in either league. Some experts have him pegged as the next .400 hitter, and as a base runner he's known as the fastest man in the game.

Vada came all the way from second on a teammate's short hit to score against the Cubs on June 18.

By Furman Bisher

During a baseball clinic at one of our military bases in Europe last winter, Fred Haney, then freshly detached as manager of the Milwaukee Braves, was asked what player he would prefer above all others if he were managing again.

"For now," said Haney, "Henry Aaron. For the future, there's no doubt about it—Vada Pinson. He can do everything, and he's just starting out. He could be the best of them all."

Haney made this pronouncement during a discussion which featured such names as Milwaukee's Aaron, San Francisco's Willie Mays, Detroit's Al Kaline and New York's Mickey Mantle. All these high-salaried young outfielders are still in their twenties, but they are old-timers compared with Pinson. He was twenty last year when he became the regular center fielder of the Cincinnati Reds. With the exception of Mantle, none of the others accomplished as much as Pinson in their first full seasons in the majors.

Undemonstrative Vada Edward Pinson Jr., who bats and throws left-handed, is the son of a Negro stevedore in Oakland, California. He is of comparatively slight build—five-eleven, 174 pounds. However, he was one of only three National Leaguers to play in all of his club's games in 1959. In the process he collected 205 hits for a .316 average, along with twenty home runs and eighty-four runs batted in. In addition, Pinson led the big leagues in doubles with forty-seven and in runs scored with 131. Both of these figures were new records for a Cincinnati player.

What fascinates the customers most about Pinson, though, is his speed. He is regularly timed at an exceptional 3.3 seconds going down to first base, and he has been clocked at less than ten seconds in running the circuitous ninety-yard route of a three-base hit. He stole twenty-one bases last year despite his inexperience. This year he had fifteen steals by mid-June. (Continued on Page 75)

Soft-spoken Pinson, left, shown with his roommate, Frank Robinson, is one of the few left-handed batters to compile a good average against left-handed pitching.

SHOW BUSINESS

NEW FACES

Sommers Is Icumen On

The voice, like wind through sugar cane, first rustled into U.S. living rooms last year singing "Now it's a Pepsi . . . for those who think young." Joanie Sommers, owner of the voice, has come a long way since those anonymous days, has already earned her first quarter-million dollars (and her first ulcer) at the age of 20. Says she: "I'm a worrywart. I'm tired and I ponder about being tired."

At the age of ten, Joanie Drost (her real name) won a prize on a Buffalo TV show singing Your Cheating Heart, largely because (she says) her numerous relatives bought piles of postcards and stuffed the ballot box by mail. Four years later her family emigrated to California. She recalls: "It was a miracle. We didn't have a flat until we were sitting in a gas station in California. We had $1.62 left."

Joanie's early career is like a clip from an old Judy Garland movie. She sang and sang—with the jukebox in the tavern where her mother worked, with the Venice (Calif.) High School dance band, with a harmony group for the Elks Club. Finally came the Big Audition—with Tommy Oliver's band at the Deauville country club in Santa Monica, and the Big Click. A demonstration disk played for Warner Bros. record company resulted in her first album, Positively the Most, a title artfully designed to rhyme with Drost. But Joanie had already decided the Drost was dross as far as names went, tried out Joan St. Clair, Joanie Post, and finally decided—for no particular reason—on Joanie Sommers. Says she: "I can't think of myself as anybody else now, even if I try."

The album and Joanie's haunted-hoarse voice, became pets of disk jockeys everywhere. A refreshing change from the smoldering young sirens whose singing style tries to suggest that they are capable of unseemly passion, Joanie sounds throaty but relaxed, is admired both by rock 'n' rollers (for whom she steadfastly refuses to rock) as well as by those who pant for Ella and Frankie. Mort Sahl heard the records, took a look at gamin-faced Joanie, signed her up to accompany him on a 35-city concert tour. Suddenly everybody wants Joanie. She has just made a movie with Mickey Rooney (Columbia's Everything's Ducky), is eagerly sought for TV specials, has nightclub engagements booked solidly for the next six months.

Next week Joanie Sommers opens at Las Vegas' super-caravansary, the Sahara, with Donald O'Connor and a $15,000 wardrobe—a handy index to the high cost of converting a cute girl who sings nicely into a major attraction. Two years ago, she played her first club date in a $2.98 ready-to-wear.

SOMMERS
But she feels tired.

SPORT

"I Was Ready"

A Polaroid camera cradled in his huge hands, Center Walt Dukes of the Detroit Pistons joked his way through a Syracuse, N.Y., locker room one evening last week snapping one distorted picture after another with wildly exaggerated incompetence. His purpose: to relax his teammates on the West squad for the National Basketball Association's annual all-star game. Of all Jokester Dukes's teammates, none had so much cause for tension as the Cincinnati Royals' Oscar ("The Big O") Robertson, the only rookie to crash the starting lineup of either the East or West team. But, as always, Robertson was the loosest man in the room. Said he later: "I was ready."

Associated Press
WEST'S SEYMOUR & ROBERTSON
To the coach, the most valuable.

He was indeed. When the game began, Robertson looked like the most seasoned pro on the floor. He kept star teammates such as Los Angeles' Elgin Baylor and St. Louis' Bob Pettit running at top speed with a series of pinpointed passes that set up easy baskets. In the very first period, Robertson himself scored 13 points—hitting on all five of his shots from the floor—to lead the West to a 47-19 lead that made inevitable his team's final victory of 153-131.

In all, Robertson scored 23 points (he sat out much of the second half), fed teammates for 14 baskets, a league record for all-star games. For putting on one of the greatest one-man shows in the history of the N.B.A., Robertson was given the game's most-valuable-player award, another proof that at the age of 22 he has become the finest all-round player in basketball. Said the West's Coach Paul Seymour: "He was excellent. He was great. He was spectacular."

Olympic Rivals—'Everyone Is Equal'

RAFER LEWIS JOHNSON, the American decathlon champion, had just been elected president of the student government at UCLA when a reporter wondered aloud what academic course Johnson was studying.

"Rafer is majoring," a friend said, "in becoming Ralph Bunche."

The comparison wasn't so farfetched. Bunche, who attended UCLA on an athletic scholarship and graduated in 1927, was a star on the basketball team and a letterman in football and baseball. Johnson, who had an athletic scholarship and graduated last year, earned letters in basketball and track and, by setting a world record in the decathlon, established himself as the greatest all-around athlete of his time.

UPI

While Johnson studied Marx . . .

But the similarities extend beyond sports. For Rafer Johnson, like United Nations' Under Secretary Bunche, hopes to make a career of international relations. "Eventually, I'd like to work for the State Department," he said last week, before the U.S. track-and-field team left for a pre-Olympic meet in Switzerland. "I'll meet people and talk to them. That's what I'd really like."

At UCLA, minoring in political science (and majoring in physical education), Johnson studied comparative political systems, Marxist theory, and African government, and maintained a straight B average. "I've spoken with Mr. Bunche," Johnson explained, "and he's encouraged me."

Message From Moscow: Besides his academic training, Johnson has had practical experience in international relations. As an athlete, he has traveled to dozens of countries and built up lasting friendships. When he wrenched his back in an automobile accident fourteen months ago, Johnson received a letter postmarked Moscow. "I am very sorry to hear about your injury," wrote Vasily Kuznetsov, the Soviet decathlon star whose record (8,357 points) Johnson (8,683) broke last month. "I hope you will be able to compete in Philadelphia."

Johnson missed the U.S.-U.S.S.R. track-and-field meet in Philadelphia last year, but now, fully recovered, he is the favorite (over Kuznetsov and C.K. Yang of Nationalist China) to win the Olympic decathlon gold medal Sept. 5-6. "I owe Kuznetsov a letter," Johnson said. "He's a nice guy. I'm looking forward to seeing him again."

The Russians, too, are looking forward to seeing Johnson. Of all the hundreds of American athletes in Rome, Johnson, tall and husky, quiet and sincere, is the most respected—by teammates and opponents. What does he feel is the value of international competition?

"We exchange ideas," Rafer Johnson once said. "We don't beat ideas into each other's heads, like politicians. It seems funny to say that winning is not all-important—I always want to win—but when you start out on the field, everyone is equal. That's the important idea."

The Sports Observer

Two Top Runners Beat Handicaps, Then Records

Among the fastest humans afoot are two young college students, one at Villanova University in Philadelphia, the other at Tennessee Agricultural & Industrial University in Nashville.

They are Villanova's Frank Budd, 22, who set the world 100-yard dash record of 9.2 seconds, and equaled the world record of 20 seconds for the 220-yard dash, and the Nashville school's Wilma Rudolph, 21, who set the world 200-meter record of 22.9 seconds, and equaled the 100-meter record of 11.3 seconds.

Their careers are remarkably similar. Both once walked with a limp, the result of injured legs.

Miss Rudolph was stricken with polio as a child. This temporarily paralyzed both legs, and left one almost useless. Budd's right leg was smaller at the calf and thigh than his left one. He doesn't know how it happened.

New Record Efforts

These two probably will go after new records this month. Budd will compete in the National Collegiate Athletic Association track and field championships at Eugene, Ore., June 15-16. He and Miss Rudolph will run in the National Amateur Athletic Union championships at Walnut, Calif., June 22-23.

Miss Rudolph's finest hours were in Rome, Italy, during the 1960 Olympic Games when she became America's first woman triple gold medal winner.

When you see her walk with the springy glide of a jungle cat, you know why some dub her "Tigerbelle." When you see her bound from the starting blocks, her smooth, sinewy legs pumping like precision machinery, you know why others call her "Skeeter."

Gilloon

Her finest hours: Wilma Rudolph at the 1960 Olympics. More glory?

It's hard to believe that a few years ago, she limped. Wilma overcame her handicap through her own decision that she wasn't going to tag along behind anybody, and through the loving care of her family. Her mother and some of her 16 brothers and sisters spent hours daily for many years massaging Miss Rudolph's legs, restoring their strength.

No Trace of the Limp

Her limp gradually vanished and when she was 13 she began running. Today, she is tall (5 feet, 11 inches) and shapely and there are no more reminders of her paralysis.

She is soft-spoken and won't talk about her track records unless asked.

Since last fall she's had another interest. She got married. Her husband is William Ward, a junior, who is a 440-yard dash man on the men's track team. They met in 1956 during tryouts for the Olympic team.

Comments Ward on their marriage: "We talk each other's language, and we have the same problems and goals."

When her running days are over (she expects to graduate next winter), Miss Rudolph hopes to be an elementary school teacher—a model to the young who can see in her life what challenge and the desire to keep up can do.

But before she takes up teaching, she has one more ambition. This is to win more honors for her country in the 1964 Olympics.

It is a job that won't be easy. Six months ago, she was stricken with a virus that kept her out of competition all winter. She returned to the track and intensive training only two weeks ago. An athletic official at Tennessee A&I said Miss Rudolph "is starting to run all over again, just like she'd never been on a track before."

So far, she's lost 14 pounds (her weight soared to 154 pounds during her illness), and she plans to trim down to her Olympic running weight of 126 pounds.

"She'll do it, too," said a coach. "She wants to run in the Olympics again."

Lots of Exercise

What of Budd's success? When he came under coaching guidance, Budd began using barbells and weights, and making trips up and down football stadium steps wearing a 10-pound vest. These exercises built up the misformed leg. The limp vanished.

Not until he reached Villanova did Budd settle down to serious running. Last year, his coach, Jim "Jumbo" Elliott, said of him:

"He could only go 80 yards until this season. Then he'd fall apart. He'd straighten up and lose his drive the last few yards."

But a year ago Budd began pushing himself. It paid off on June 25, 1961, in New York. He ran 100 yards in 9.2 seconds, the fastest any human had ever run the distance. This spring, he equaled the 220-yard record.

'Always Drives Low'

Elliott describes Budd's running style:

"For a 172-pound kid, he has terrific thighs. Frank runs economically. He has very little flareup (track talk for the kick of the foot behind the runner). His feet are always driving close to the ground. He has great reflexes off the blocks and always drives low."

Budd is unmarried, quiet, modest, and untouched by the sudden attention he began receiving last year when he broke the 13-year-old 100-yard dash record. He is a junior studying marketing at the School of Commerce and Finance.

UPI

Frank Budd sets 100-yard dash record.

When he finishes school one interesting possibility is that he may play professional football. He was drafted by the Philadelphia Eagles of the National Football League. Vince McNally, the Eagles general manager, said: "Can you imagine Budd as a flanker or as a defensive halfback? Nobody could beat him."

Budd was a much publicized high school athlete, but did not play football at Villanova.

Asked once if the immense size of professional football players didn't worry him, Budd replied: "They don't concern me right now. When I get there they might."

MATTIWILDA DOBBS
Studied With Mme. Lotte Leonard

RECITAL WEDNESDAY

Mattiwilda Dobbs Has Loyal Fans at Home

By FRANK DANIEL

Atlanta's brilliant addition to the singers of the Metropolitan Opera Association, coloratura Mattiwilda Dobbs, has a home-grown claque. She is the next-youngest of six sisters, and the others are her most loyal fans.

Miss Dobbs' recital Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. at the Municipal Auditorium will be unique in two respects. It will be her first appearance in Atlanta without her most devoted fan of all—her father, John Wesley Dobbs. He died last summer, having seen his Mattiwilda become internationally famous.

This will also be the first time Miss Dobbs has made a public appearance in Atlanta not singing in either a church or a school auditorium. Changing attitudes concerning segregated audiences explains the innovation.

* * *

LIKE ALL the Dobbs sisters, Mattiwilda is a graduate of Spelman College. "Our father was one of the most generous of men," says the third of the sisters, Mrs. R. H. (Millicent Dobbs) Jordan, who is in the English department at Spelman. "But in two respects he was inflexible. He required us all to graduate from Spelman before continuing our education wherever we chose. And he demanded that we all take piano lessons between the ages of seven and 17."

Mrs. Jordan is one of the four Dobbs sisters who later took master degrees at Columbia University. The eldest of the sextet is also the family Ph.D. She is Mrs. M. H. (Irene) Jackson, head of the French department at North Carolina State College in Durham. She received her degree at Toulouse University, in France.

Sister No. 2 is Mrs. B. J. (Willie Juliet) Blackburn, chairman of language arts, Jackson College, Jackson, Miss. After Mrs. Jordan comes Mrs. W. A. (Josephine) Clement, whose husband has just been named vice president of the North Carolina Life Insurance Co., in Durham. Miss Dobbs is the fifth, in private life Mrs. Bengt Janzon, and the youngest is Mrs. Hugh (June) Butts, who lives in the Bronx, N.Y., and is in the doctorate program at Columbia.

* * *

MATTIWILDA majored in music and minored in Spanish at Spelman. It was during her senior year that her extraordinary voice began to assert itself. She received special training in Atlanta from a choir singer, Miss Margaret Fisher, once of St. Luke Methodist Church, who urged serious study.

Miss Dobbs went to New York to study with Mme. Lotte Leonard. She also studied at the Mannes Opera School and one summer at Tanglewood, Mass. Meanwhile, she was studying languages at Columbia. She won the John Hay Whitney award to study for a year in France with Pierre Bernac. She also studied in Spain, because of special fondness for the Spanish language and the Spanish people.

Miss Dobbs won her first outstanding recognition as winner of the Geneva International Vocal Competition in 1951, which led to her contract at La Scala, in Milan. She was engaged for the

Associated Press

CLEMENTE, MAYS & AARON
Speed, power and color.

ing," says he, "we are getting the hitting. It's the best balanced team I've ever handled." Even so, nobody in the power-packed National League is ready to concede. "It's too early to hand 'em the flag," says Pittsburgh's Murtaugh. Predicts Pirate Trainer Danny Whelan: "The Reds will fold next month. Then either the Dodgers or the Pirates will move in for the kill." Maybe. But Cincinnatians reply with a lusty rendition of the closing refrain:

You can tell your old Aunt Hattie,
This year it's Cincinnati.

The Brown Bombers

Since the Brooklyn Dodgers brought Jackie Robinson up from their Montreal farm club in 1947 to break major league baseball's color bar, the National League has had a virtual corner on talented Negro players. Seven of its top ten batters, its top four home-run hitters, its top four in runs-batted-in are colored; the American League has but one Negro among its top ten batters, New York's Elston Howard, none among the leaders in the other two categories. Though Negroes make up roughly 17% of the 200 players on National League rosters, this year's All-Star squad is 36% Negro. Last week, in the 30th All-Star game, their speed and power gave the underdog National League a 5-4 victory over the American League. Negroes rapped out nine of the National League's eleven hits, batted in five runs, scored all five as well.

The first National League run came on a triple by Pittsburgh's Roberto Clemente and a sacrifice fly by Bill White of St. Louis, the second on Clemente's sacrifice fly (scoring San Francisco's Willie Mays), the third on a pinch home run by Chicago's George Altman. The American League tied the game in the ninth when howling winds turned the contest in San Francisco's Candlestick Park into a Little League affair—there were a record seven errors, a passed ball and a balk—and went ahead 4-3 in the tenth on an unearned run. But when Baltimore's Hoyt Wilhelm went to the mound, four Negro batsmen pushed across two runs to win the game before anybody was out. Milwaukee's Hank Aaron lashed a pinch single to center. Mays doubled him home. After Wilhelm hit Cincinnati's Frank Robinson with a pitch, Clemente lined a sharp single to right, and Willie Mays jogged across the plate. It was the third straight All-Star victory for the National League—and a good reason for the American League to recruit more Negro talent.

Young Cincinnatian Has Big GOP Campaign Role

BY DICK KIRKPATRICK

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4—A 34-year-old young Republican from Cincinnati has been assigned a major campaign role that could make Ohio the most politically dominant state in the U. S. House of Representatives during the next session of Congress.

He is Sherman E. Unger, 3418 Ault View Ave., Hyde Park, an attorney on leave from Frost & Jacobs, legal firm, who quietly joined the GOP congressional campaign staff here as special assistant to the chairman in mid-July.

If the Republicans can gain control of the House in the November election, Ohio Republican veterans in the House will take over the chairmanship of five committees—three of them the powerful committees on Rules, Judiciary and Foreign Affairs.

To demonstrate the potent position of the Ohio Republicans in House leadership, only Pennsylvania (which would gain three chairmanships) would have more than two of the committee posts.

Although still a young Republican, being under 35 years of age, Mr. Unger is no novice to politics. In the 1960 presidential campaign he traveled 42,000 miles as an advance man for the Richard M. Nixon campaign, and in 1961 accompanied Mr. Nixon on his speaking tour analyzing the first 100 days of the Kennedy administration.

IN HIS political post here, Mr. Unger will organize and direct a field force of 10 to 12 men in the key congressional districts.

Republican national leaders have been increasingly more optimistic about winning control of the next House of Representatives. To do so, Republicans must pick up 44 seats.

President Kennedy in a recent press conference expressed hopes that the Democrats can reverse the general trend in off-year elections by gaining five to 10 Democratic seats.

So it is likely that every marginal congressional district throughout the nation will be a battleground in November. In Ohio, Republicans hope to pick up at least three seats, Mr. Unger indicated.

Although political leaders are hesitant to cite districts in which their strongest campaign efforts will be made, it stands to reason that Ohio Republicans pin their greatest hopes for gains in the at-large race of State Rep. Robert Taft Jr., Cincinnati, and in the Democratic-held 10th and 11th districts.

The 10th District, in southeastern Ohio, is held by Walter Moeller (D., Lancaster), and the 11th District, in northeastern Ohio, by Robert Cook (D., Ravenna), who is opposed by former GOP Rep. Oliver Bolton.

Had Rep. Gordon Scherer (R., Cincinnati) sought reelection, Ohio Republicans would have taken over six committee chairmenships. Mr. Scherer, who is retiring, is the ranking Republican on the House Un-American Activities Committee.

THE OHIO Republicans who would move into the committee chairmanships, in the event of a GOP November victory, are:

Clarence Brown, Blanchester, Rules Committee.

William McCulloch, Piqua, Judiciary Committee.

Mrs. Frances Bolton, Cleveland, House Foreign Affairs.

Paul Schenck, Dayton, House Administration Committee.

William Ayres, Akron House Veterans Affairs.

Sherman E. Unger

Mr. Unger, a graduate of Miami University in 1950 and the University of Cincinnati Law School in 1953, joined Frost & Jacobs in 1956. He was president of the Hamilton County Young Republican Club in 1959 and runner-up as the outstanding Young Republican of Ohio in 1959.

He was 1960 campaign chairman of the Ohio League of Young Republican Clubs and assistant chief page of the Republican National Convention in 1960.

Mrs. Unger and their two children, Cathleen, seven, and Peter, 4½, will join him in Washington in a few days until school. Mr. Unger will return to his Cincinnati law practice after the November election.

Davis of Syracuse Is Winner Of Heisman Memorial Trophy

Ferguson of Ohio State Is Second, Saxton of Texas Next in Football Poll

By WILLIAM J. BRIORDY

Ernie Davis, Syracuse University's star half back, yesterday was named the winner of the Heisman Memorial Trophy as the outstanding collegiate football player in the country. The award is sponsored by the Downtown Athletic Club.

In gaining the 1961 Heisman Trophy, Davis became the first Negro athlete to be honored since the award was established in 1935. The Syracuse star will receive the trophy a week from tonight at a dinner at the Downtown A.C., 19 West Street.

Davis received 179 first-place votes, 103 second-place votes and 81 third-place votes for a total of 824 points. The votes were tabulated from 840 registered selectors, including sports writers, sportscasters and telecasters from all sections of the country.

The 6-foot 2-inch 212-pound senior from Elmira, N. Y., was the leading ground-gainer for Syracuse for the past three seasons.

Ferguson Gets 771

Second in the balloting was another Negro star and also a halfback, Bob Ferguson of Ohio State. Ferguson polled 771 points. In third place was Jimmy Saxton, Texas University halfback, with 551 points.

During the 1961 season, Davis gained 823 yards on 150 carries for a 5.5-per-try average. He made fifteen touchdowns and scored 94 points. He also paced the Orange in pass-receiving with sixteen catches for 157 yards.

Davis broke career records set by Jim Brown at Syracuse in rushing, with 2,386 yards; yards gained in all departments, 3,414; scoring, 220 points, and touchdowns, 35.

Deming to Present Award

The Syracuse star is the son of Mrs. Arthur Radford. His mother and officials and coaches from Syracuse will be present when Davis receives the award from Clifford E. Deming, the president of the Downtown A. C.

The winner of the Heisman award last year was Joe Bellino of the United States Naval Academy. Jay Berwanger of Chicago was the first winner, in 1935. Notre Dame has produced the most winners, five.

Following Saxton in the voting were: Sandy Stephens, Minnesota, 543 points; Pat Trammel, Alabama, 362; Joe Romig, Colorado, 279; John Hadl, Kansas, 172; Gary Collins, Maryland, 167; Ron Gabriel, North Carolina State, 155; Merlin Olsen, Utah State, 93; Alex Kroll, Rutgers, 70; Greg Mather, Navy, 67; Dave Hoppman, Iowa State, 61, and Lance Alworth, Arkansas, 50.

A breakdown on the sectional voting showed Davis first in the East, third in the South, fourth in the Southwest, third in the Midwest and third in the Far West. Ferguson was first in the Midwest, second in the East, Southwest and Far West, and fifth in the South.

Associated Press

Ernie Davis

Former Heisman Winners

1935—Jay Berwanger, Chicago.
1936—Larry Kelley, Yale.
1937—Clinton Frank, Yale.
1938—Davey O'Brien, Texas Christian.
1939—Nile Kiniick, Iowa.
1940—Tom Harmon, Michigan.
1941—Bruce Smith, Minnesota.
1942—Frank Sinkwich, Georgia.
1943—Angelo Bertelli, Notre Dame.
1944—Leslie Horvath, Ohio State.
1945—Felix Blanchard, West Point.
1946—Glenn Davis, West Point.
1947—John Lujack, Notre Dame.
1948—Doak Walker, S. M. U.
1949—Leon Hart, Notre Dame.
1950—Vic Janowicz, Ohio State.
1951—Dick Kazmaier, Princeton.
1952—Billy Vessels, Oklahoma.
1953—John Lattner, Notre Dame.
1954—Alan Ameche, Wisconsin.
1955—Howard Cassady, Ohio State.
1956—Paul Hornung, Notre Dame.
1957—John Crow, Texas A. & M.
1958—Pete Dawkins, West Point.
1959—Billy Cannon, Louisiana State.
1960—Joe Bellino, Navy.

TAFT

Robert A. Taft Jr. is a little chunkier, a little warmer and perhaps even slightly more conservative than his father, the late Robert A. Taft, a long-time Senator from Ohio and "Mr. Republican."

But "Young Taft" at 45 has now embarked on the same national road with his election as Representative-at-Large from Ohio. Republican, of course.

It is his fate to be held in by the family tradition and be measured by his father's achievements. Great-grandfather Alphonse was Attorney General in Grant's cabinet; grandfather William Howard was both President and Chief Justice of the United States; father was the man whose Taft-Hartley labor act is still news.

The Same House

Bob Taft seems to like it. His bright red compact car carries his father's 240 license plate number. With his wife and four children he lives in the 10-room house he inherited from his parents. He has taken his father's place in the family law firm—and his father's office in the Dixie Terminal Building.

For eight years he has been a member of the State Legislature but it was not until this election that he felt ready to take on a national office. Perhaps a leisured pace, including considerable golf and some fishing, explains why he looks 10 years younger than he is.

Yale and Harvard

Now he will be in the grooming for darkhorse status as a possible Vice-Presidential candidate; possible Presidential timber beyond 1964.

To the task he brings a legal mind trained at Yale and Harvard Law School and a set of convictions that back low-cost housing; his father's labor legislation and a strong amount of government economy. His most significant deviation from his father's pattern—aside from the fact that the older Taft did not pass on his middle initial—may be a distaste for Federal aid to education, which his father supported.

He is looking forward to the 1964 elections when his father's old seat will be in the balance. With a solid win now, he is in a good position to bid then.

The Jumpingest Man on Earth

Condensed from The Rotarian

ALEX HALEY

The story of a teen-age champion —quiet, modest John Thomas— who made one of the most dramatic comebacks in the history of sports

AT BOSTON University in March 1959, an 18-year-old freshman stepped into an elevator, dropped onto a stool and pushed the handle to go up. He was John Thomas, a lanky Negro youth of 6 feet 5 inches who only a month earlier had set new records with an "impossible" 7-foot-1¼-inch high jump. Track fans considered him America's top bet to win a gold medal in the 1960 Olympics. Now he sat relaxed with his long legs spraddled out. He did not notice that his left foot was sticking out through the metal-grille door of the old-fashioned elevator cage—until suddenly the desert boot he wore was caught between the rising elevator and the next floor. In a split second his foot was mashed.

Torn with anguish and pain, Thomas was rushed to the Massachusetts Memorial Hospitals. Surgeons hastily examined the foot. X rays showed no fractures, but tissue had been lacerated so the tendons of all the toes, and some of the nerves, were exposed. Abrasions made it questionable that the skin would survive. As the surgeons prepared to operate, press wires flashed the news across the United States. To sportswriters and fans everywhere it looked like the end of a fantastic career which had just begun.

No patient in the hospital was calmer than John Thomas. Almost as soon as he was removed from the operating room his pleasant, triangular face mustered a smile for the nurses. But the cast on his lower left leg made him realize that his athletic future was in doubt. His mother was his first visitor. She saw in his eyes the same quiet determination to win which she had seen so often before. She knew her boy. "You're going to jump again, John," she told him. "Everything's going to work out all right."

To avoid deterioration of his muscles, Thomas, while still in bed, began exercising doggedly on an apparatus of pulleys and weights. Therapists kneaded and massaged the leg above the plaster cast. But then it became apparent that the skin would not survive. The healing process would cause contraction and stiffening of the toes. To prevent this there would have to be a skin graft. On April 27 Dr. Chester W. Howe performed the operation. Skin 1/10,000 of an inch thick was cut from Thomas's left thigh and sutured with fine silk over the butterfly-shaped wound on his foot.

Finally, in mid-May, Thomas was discharged. His left calf had not shrunk as much as expected, but it was still three quarters of an inch thinner than the right.

As in previous years, he spent the summer at a Boy Scout camp. Boston University athletic officials and doctors agreed it would be all right if he would "take it very easy on that foot." He complied by taking only short walks at first—but the rest of the time he was lifting weights, doing stretching exercises, massaging his calf, swimming. Always he exercised until his body cried for rest, and then he did a little more. Slowly he lengthened the hikes until he was walking long distances without having to stop to ease the injured foot. And in late summer, when he returned to Boston, he displayed the old, elastic stride.

Though football was not his sport, he asked to accompany the university football team to its training camp. There he was soon catching passes with an expertness that made the regular ends unashamedly envious. No one would have pushed him as hard in training as he now drove himself. Said a coach, "To see a champion fighting through—it is a beautiful thing to watch."

Then last January came the sensational announcement: in the Boston Knights of Columbus Meet, first track meet of the 1960 indoor collegiate season, Boston University would enter John Thomas in the high jump.

Applause filled the packed house as Thomas, looking straight ahead, walked toward what B.U. students have called his "launching pad." It was ten months since he had last jumped publicly. Standing alone in white shirt and crimson shorts, he watched an official turn a marker to indicate that the bar was set at a warm-up height of 6 feet 2½ inches. The noise had become a pin-drop hush. Suddenly John Thomas moved . . . seven lengthening, jungle-cat strides. Then the spikes on the crucial left foot dug in while the right leg lashed up in a mighty high-kick, and he was over the bar with space to spare.

John Thomas made four more jumps, with the bar raised two inches each time. Finally the bar rested at 7 feet ½ inch. He cleared it—and the arena exploded into a standing, roaring ovation for a champion's dramatic comeback.

And John had accomplished it calmly and without bravura. "Nothing fazes him," says Vic Stout, B.U. athletic director. "There have been few youngsters in the history of sports who have had so much publicity heaped on their heads. But John has stood up under it beautifully."

John grew up across the river from Boston, in Cambridge, where his father drives a bus. He was a quiet youngster whose life revolved around sports, Boy Scouting and the youth activities of the Ebenezer Baptist Church. In his senior year at Rindge Technical High School, coached by Tom Duffy, he dominated New England track competition, establishing high-jump records in eight major "schoolboy" meets and also winning the state high-hurdle event. When he graduated in 1958, John was invited to join a group of American trackmen about to compete in Japan.

There, before huge crowds, he jumped in seven meets, and became the Japanese national champion with a prodigious leap of 6 feet 10⅝ inches. He was staggered when teammates pointed out that he had only another five eighths of an inch to go to tie the Olympic record. "It made me realize that I maybe could really do that," John says.

College recruiters from around the country had approached John while he was still in high school. But Boston University was close to home, and John, who wants to be a teacher-coach, could pursue a degree in education there. He chose B.U.

To make his style as nearly faultless as possible, John spends hours in unrelenting practice. The "straddle roll" he uses is described as "stride, gather, kick, bounce, relax and roll." John approaches the bar from the left, his seven loping strides getting longer as he goes, until the last one spans eight and a half feet. Then the left foot brakes him and he springs off that heel, a split second ahead of the powerful right-leg high-kick. Slow-motion films show his body rolling over the bar almost languidly, the left leg following. Then he lands on his buttocks in a pit filled three feet deep with foam-rubber chunks.

Thomas never knows how high he jumps in practice, for then he is thinking only of form and style. His coaches, Doug Raymond and Ed Flanagan, set the bar and he never asks at what level. Last March 11, in an airliner bound for the Chicago Relays, Raymond told him, "John, you did seven-two last Tuesday." "I did?" exclaimed Thomas.

That night, thousands saw Thomas go 7 feet 2½ inches, smashing for the fourth time the record he set in 1959. This remains the highest Thomas has ever jumped in public. When his coaches are asked if he has gone higher in practice, they just smile.

Track fans confidently expect that, at the 1960 World Olympics in Rome this August and September, he will lift the crown from the present titleholder, Charles Dumas of the University of Southern California. The closest other competitor will probably be Russia's outdoor champion, Yuri Stepanov, whose highest leap so far has been 7 feet 1 inch. At Boston University, Olympic confidence is at such a peak that the Varsity Club has already presented a round-trip ticket to Rome to Coach Raymond.

His coaches have an affection for John Thomas that is deep and obvious. "A kid so nice you'd be proud if he was your own," says Raymond. "He has manners and dignity—you can see the mark of the boy who grew up in the Boy Scouts and the church."

Shy to the point of wariness of anyone desiring to make a hero of him, John seems to regard manifestations of his fame with a startled, objective awe. But he sincerely enjoys his steady stream of fan mail from around the world, acknowledging every letter and saving the foreign stamps. Often he is asked in his fan mail about problems he has encountered because of his race. This question embarrasses him. He answers frankly that he has had no such problems.

John's father, making his bus circuit, is constantly responding to queries about his boy or acknowledging congratulations. "I try not to be too proud," he says.

Artfelt Comment

A LITTLE boy stopped in front of an abstract painting in an exhibition of local talent in Arizona. "What's that?" he asked his mother.

"It's supposed to be a cowhand and his horse," she explained.

"Well," asked the boy, "why ain't it?"

—Bennett Cerf in This Week Magazine

From Way Down South

King Kong, whose real name was Ezekiel Dhlamini, was the strutting, swaggering ex-heavyweight champion of black South Africa. A man of action and violence, he drowned himself in 1957 rather than go to jail for killing his girl friend. King Kong, with the environment which produced him—the sprawling, brawling shanty towns, or townships, surrounding Johannesburg—is also the subject of a so-called "jazz opera" which opened in London last week. While some of the critics had reservations about the show's "naïveté" and "stage clumsiness," most capitulated in the end to its "rhythm and vitality" and "bursting, smoking, glowing life."

The smartly dressed first nighters who jammed London's huge Princes Theater loved it. They shouted and clapped through fifteen curtain calls as the entire cast lustily repeated the catchy title song "King Kong," the spine-tingling African road workers' blues "Tshotsholosa," the torchy "Back of the Moon" melody, and a delightful penny-whistle number called "Be Smart—Be Wise." Only a gently played "God Save the Queen" sent them home.

That "King Kong" ever came into being at all is a miracle of sorts in an era when apartheid dominates South Africa. Its diminutive composer, Todd Tozama Matshikiza, used to be a razor-blade salesman and his great-grandfather was a Fingo tribal witch doctor. The show's director and librettist, on the other hand, are white: Leon Gluckman, the director, is an intense former Old Vic actor; Harry Bloom, who wrote the book, is a peppery lawyer and author. Because of South Africa's strict segregation laws, the cast is all Negro. Most of its 40 members were domestic servants, laborers, clerks, teachers, messengers, and shopgirls. Nathan Dambuza Mdledle, who plays the title role, is one of the show's few professionals. A sinewy 37-year-old Xosa tribesman, he began singing at 7, formed a quartet at 12, and has been in show business ever since. Hip-swinging Peggy Eunice Nomgqibelo Phango, who plays Joyce, the leading female role, is also a Xosa, but with little previous theatrical experience, having been a factory hand, a domestic servant, and a nurse.

Since its première three years ago in Johannesburg, more than 120,000 people —80,000 of them whites—have jammed segregated auditoriums, movie houses, and concert halls to see it. Members of the cast, even with special permits, were frequently arrested for pass offenses and had to be bailed out of jail the next day. Probably "King Kong" prevailed because, as one London critic put it, the show is "almost aggressively nonpolitical," and is concerned more with the zesty, colorful, and uninhibited violence of life in the townships.

The jazz which sprung up in these settlements and which is played in "King Kong" was derived from American swing music of the '30s, composer Matshikiza explained last week. "We never did latch on to Dixieland," he said. "It didn't have the reverberating drum tempo we were accustomed to."

The ambition of almost everyone in "King Kong" is to emulate the success their first leading lady, Miriam Makeba, has had in the United States (NEWSWEEK, Jan. 25). As Mdledle put it: "Man, this is my break. If I make good, I'll have a go at the States, the home of show biz . . . If the London cats like it, we're in." If the reaction of England's top jazz bandsman, Johnny Dankworth, was any criterion, Mdledle had it made. "I couldn't keep my feet from tapping," said Dankworth. "I dug it most."

Central Press

'King Kong' in Britain: 'If the London cats like it, we're in'

Associated Press Photo

ROGER MARIS (L), WILMA RUDOLPH HONORED
Show Trophies Naming Them Top Athletes

Yank Star, Wilma Get AP Awards

Roger Believed To Be Seeking $75,000 This Year

MILWAUKEE (AP)—Home run king Roger Maris arrived at his last stop Thursday before heading into New York to renew contract negotiations with the Yankees.

Maris, reportedly aiming for a 1962 salary of $75,000, came to Milwaukee to receive a trophy as The Associated Press male athlete of the year for 1961. He and track star Wilma Rudolph Ward, the AP woman athlete of the year, were honored at noon at a private luncheon.

Thursday night they were to receive the Frederick C. Miller Memorial Trophies, named for the Milwaukee brewer-sportsman, at an awards dinner of the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

The 27-year-old Yankee slugger told newsmen, prior to the luncheon, that he had no meeting scheduled but was going to New York Friday and hoped toarrange a conference with the ball club management. At a preliminary meeting last month, Maris said he anticipated no difficulties.

A reporter asked Maris if the expansion of the American League to 10 clubs last season helped him smash Babe Ruth's record with 61 homers. The Bambino had 60 in eight fewer games.

"No," said Maris, "it just takes a lot of luck. I was the luckiest guy in the world."

The National League expands in 1962 but it will not help senior circuit hitters materially, Maris said, adding "they'll just have to be lucky, too."

Maris and Mrs. Ward—a winner of the AP poll for the second straight year—easily outdistanced all competition in the 1961 balloting. Maris is the first baseball player to win the trophy since Ted Williams in 1957.

Wilma, the hurrying Tennessee State star, swept the 1960 poll after a triple triumph in the Olympic Games. Record-shattering performances—11.2 seconds in the 100-meters at Stuttgart, and 6.8 in the indoor 6-yard dash—helped her to repeat this year. She also won the James E. Sullivan Award for 1961, presented annually by the Amateur Athletic Union to the amateur athlete who did the most to advance good sportsmanship.

The willowy, attractive runner, told an interviewer upon her arrival here that she is determined to repeat her Olympic triumphs in 1964. She was married in October but said she doesn't believe that having a family need be a handicap.

"Most of the Russian women runners in the last Olympics had two or three children," she said, "and that didn't bother them."

Celestine Sibley

Whether It's Culture or It Ain't, Politicos Should Like Symphony

Today the Georgia legislature will be honored by the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra with a special concert down at the Trinity Methodist Church. Some people have noted this event with peculiar delight, pegging it as the coming together of two entirely foreign elements—politicians and culture. We-ell, I don't know. I wouldn't want to go all out to classify the orchestra as culture, for one thing. It seems a formidable appellation for a jolly group of people set on giving pleasure. After I heard these musicians play at the Atlanta y little budding sense of awe I year. The reason is obvious. Politicians, like other people, are getting more education, traveling more, reading more, taking more time for leisurely cultivation of pleasant tastes. The old pro who used to stay in a smoke-filled room drinking bad whisky and plotting worse strategy is giving way to the tweedy ex-fraternity man who practices a little law, raises a few purebred cattle, has a Cordon Bleu hand at cookouts on his patio, spends water-skiing weekends with his wife and children on some neighboring lake and takes a rapid reading course to help him through all the books he's curious about.

I think the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra will have a pretty knowledgeable audience for its concert today.

eak Enough for His Help rdened with many problems. One ead: "The Age of Problems." We y other generation. Our problems find a way to settle them on the bility sends us back to the school not come easy, but they are pos-the already overwhelming unrest in our world. Then, you can pray for the people of the world."

We find it sometimes hard to recognize that our enemies are God's children, too. I know they don't always act like it, but we

VOCAL TONE SUPERB

Mattiwilda Dobbs Triumphant Here

By CHAPPELL WHITE
Atlanta Journal Music Critic

Mattiwilda Dobbs, Atlanta's most distinguished concert opera star, returned from triumphs in Europe and at the Metropolitan for her first solo appearance at the Municipal Auditorium Wednesday night.

Mayor Ivan Allen was on hand to make the welcome official, and the audience was warmly enthusiastic, glad at long last for the chance to recognize an outstanding artist.

It was an occasion to remember. And, one from which we may look with confidence to the future.

* * *

IT WAS ALSO the occasion of a distinguished recital. Miss Dobbs' vice is coloratura, light and clear in quality, and she makes no effort to give a false richness and depth. Within the limitations of the type, however, the tone is superb. Her technique is virtually flawless. She produces a variety of subtle tone colors, and the precision of pitch and attack result in a rare and beautiful clarity.

All too frequently coloraturists are limited in repertoire, and succeed primarily as vocal acrobats. Not Miss Dobbs. She included Bach's arias, Brahms lider, French art songs, Negro spirituals, and Villa-Lobos' unusual Bachianas Brasileiras Number 5 — in addition to the conventional colortura brilliance of Rossini and Offenbach.

In all, her sense of style was secure.

* * *

THE BRAHM'S GROUP had two lovely little-known songs, and Chausson suffered as usual from the unsatisfactory conditions of the Municipal Auditorium, but otherwise Miss Dobbs overcome all difficulties. She reached her height after intermission with a scintillating and altogether charming rendition of the Doll Song from Tales of Hoffmann and a warm, vibrant performance of Villa-Lobos.

The spirituals were unusual and were sung with simplicity and straightforward emotion.

Miss Dobbs is a great artist who can sing anywhere in the world. We hope that henceforth Atlanta will be a frequent stop on her schedule.

A 4th American Negro Elevated To Bishop by the Episcopalians

By Jo-ann Price
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

COLUMBIA, S. C.

The House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church yesterday elected a fourth American Negro priest to serve as a Bishop of the church at the present time. He is the Rev. Cedric Earl Mills, 58, rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, of Baltimore.

Bishop-elect Mills will be the first bishop of the newly expanded Missionary District of the Virgin Islands. He was chosen in an election at which the Bishops also named a Filipino, the Rev. Edward Guadan Longid, 54, as a second Suffragan Bishop of the Philippines Missionary District.

Both choices were seen as reflecting overseas growth and the wish of the church's leadership to build up a resident indigenous clergy to give voice to Christian ideals amid rising nationalisms.

Altogether it is believed that seven Negroes have been elected to the church's episcopate. The first was Bishop James T. Holly, who became the first Missionary Bishop of Haiti in 1874.

On Sept. 22, the Diocese of Massachusetts selected the Rev. John M. Burgess, Archdeacon of Boston, to serve as a suffragan, or assisting bishop. He is the first Negro Bishop elected with authority over white congregations. The church also has two American Negro bishops serving in Monrovia, Liberia. They are attending the session which ends at Trinity Church here today.

The elections are subject to consent of the majority of the standing (executive) committees of all the dioceses of the 3.5-million-member Episcopal Church.

The choice of Bishop-elect Mills, who for three years, starting in 1937, was in charge of St. Mark's Church, of Plainfield, N.J., was hailed by Missionary Bishop Albert E. Swift, of Puerto Rico.

Noting that the Virgin Islands are predominantly Negro and English-speaking, he said "some tensions" have arisen with the white minority and "the church can only speak adequately through a resident bishop." Bishop Swift has been in charge of the Virgin Islands District, but he said; "we have felt that the Virgin Islands should not be taken care of by a stepfather."

ROBERT HAYES
A Record Ahead

HAYES TIES BUDD'S 9.2 FOR 100

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 17 (AP). Robert Hayes, who said he felt out of shape, ran the 100-yard dash in 9.2 seconds Saturday, tying the world record set last June.

"I wasn't in shape today," the 18-year-old Florida A&M (Negro) University sophomore said. "I sure didn't feel sharp. I was for sure surprised when they said I hit the tape at 9.2."

* * *

HAYES tied the record set by Frank Budd of Villanova at the National Amateur Athletic Union Track Meet in New York June 24, 1961.

"There's no doubt of Hayes' record's validity," said Vince Lally, head of the Florida Athletic Club, sponsor of the invitational track and field meet at the University of Miami.

"This is an AAU-sanctioned meet. The track meets all specifications and the gauge recorded a 4½-mile-per-hour wind against Hayes."

In an interview later, Hayes told newsmen:

"Running fast just comes natural to me. I used to outrun all the kids in the block when I was little.

"I think I will get 9 seconds flat within two years; but I got to get in shape first. I wasn't in shape today."

Hayes credited teammate Robert Paramore, 22, with his victory. "This ole boy here," he said, putting his arm around Paramore's shoulders, "pushed me to it. He was sure biting at my heels like a fast ole hound dog."

MUSIC

An American Abroad

"I am not interested in a steady post in America any more," says American Conductor Dean Dixon. He has his reasons. As a Negro, he is convinced that his chances of finding a permanent post in the U.S. are no better now than they were when he decamped for Europe 13 years ago; as a musician, he is so much in demand abroad that he has not been able to take a vacation for eleven years. And his popularity shows no sign of diminishing.

Last week in Frankfurt, after Dixon conducted the Hessian Radio Orchestra in a program of Schoenberg, Debussy and Mozart, the ovation he got only echoed what critics have been saying in print—that in his first season at the head of the orchestra, Dixon has made the musicians play "as if transformed."

For all his flair, Dixon is no fancy Dan. His gestures are so economical that the audience often fails to see them; when the orchestra is surging forward on its own momentum, Dixon may suspend conducting entirely for bars on end. Such restrained emotion is reflected in Dixon's music-making. It is neither hot-bloodedly Tuscan, in the manner of Toscanini, nor chiseled and cold, as many Europeans believe all music made by Americans must be. Instead, it is full-bodied and vigorous, while it remains consistently controlled. In Frankfurt, Dixon's style has earned him a reputation for playing Beethoven, Mozart and Brahms in the Germanic fashion—which is the highest accolade the city can bestow.

Dixon, 47, spends about a third of the year in Frankfurt, the remainder of his time racing by plane or in his own Volkswagen to performances with virtually every major orchestra in Europe. He is an extraordinarily accomplished guest conductor, a talent he had already well developed before he left home in the 1940s, with degrees from Juilliard and Columbia in his pocket. By then he had already collected kind reviews while leading such major U.S. orchestras as the New York Philharmonic and the NBC Symphony. Trouble was, he got no offers of a fulltime conducting post, and in 1949 he moved to Paris, later to Sweden, where he took over the Göteborg Orchestra.

Convinced as ever that his self-imposed exile is necessary ("I know of no Negro member of any leading American orchestra"),* Dixon stubbornly harbors an American dream. "I would like to go back," says he, "leading my own symphony." But despite his dreams, home remains a hilltop house outside Frankfurt, where he lives with his second wife—Finnish Baroness and Playwright Mary Mandelin. And Frankfurt, it seems, is where Dixon is likely to stay. "These people," he says, "are really in the music business."

KURT BETHKE

CONDUCTOR DIXON IN FRANKFURT
Opportunities unavailable at home.

A 'VOICE' FOUND HERE

By DORIS LOCKERMAN

A thin young Atlanta Negro girl who brought the detached musicians of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra to their feet yelling "Bravo" during a student concert last season, will become the pupil of Boris Goldovsky, foremost vocal coach in the nation who found her exceptional voice possesses "astonishing opulence for one so young."

Doris Lockerman's column appears regularly in the daily Atlanta Constitution.

"Charlotte Anne Gibson is only the second superlative fresh talent I have seen in Atlanta in my 17 years here," said Henry Sopkin, conductor of the symphony. "The other one is Beverly Wolff. Charlotte has a lyric soprano range of 2½ octaves. She sings a high B with no effort and has fantastic diction."

Through the intercession of Maestro Sopkin and an anonymous benefactor, the young Howard High School graduate will be given a full academic, as well as musical, education with only two restrictions:

"SHE MUST do her best," Sopkin says, "keeping up her grades. She must not sing in public anywhere but in church until she returns to Atlanta to make her world-wide debut here in our new music hall. We will have it before then, you know."

That Charlotte Gibson's debut will be forthcoming, neither the girl nor her teachers and sponsors doubt. She has been singing since she was 2, has served as pianist for the Liberty Baptist Church for years and has long been compared favorably with the great Mattawilda Dobbs.

"She already has a better voice than Mattawilda," one ardent critic has observed, "Hers is really a once-in-a-lifetime talent."

Charlotte herself shrinks from such comparisons. She deeply respects Marion Anderson, Leontyne Price and Miss Dobbs, but she does not wish to imitate them. "I want to amount to something myself," she says modestly.

Charlotte is the only child of Mrs. Alma Carter Gibson, 491 Auburn Ave., NE, a widow who has been a longtime employee of Scripto, Inc. She has never studied what she calls "strenuous" voice, but her piano teacher, Mrs. Elsie Evans, has helped her with breathing and diction. Mrs. Evans is an English teacher at Turner High School. Another teacher, Mrs. M. F. Harper of Howard's staff has also helped her.

THE YOUNG singer's appearance with the Atlanta Symphony came through the effort of Mrs. Beatrice Gore, an area supervisor of music for the public schools. Charlotte had been selected from competitive singers in two auditions, and was then auditioned by Maestro Sopkin before she was invited to appear as soloist.

"My orchestra does not accompany these student soloists at youth concerts," he explained, "because of the heavy rehearsal expense. They bring their own accompanists. Usually, while they are performing, my musicians just relax. But when this slender little girl opened up with "Vissi D'Arte," her voice hit the back of the auditorium. You should have seen my players sit up. So little, and so much power. Like Beverly Wolff, she sings from the heart."

Charlotte is studying English and composition at Atlanta University's summer school to learn "some of the many things I don't know," preparatory to entering Chatham School in New York in September. There she will begin by studying harmonics and languages and do some vocalizing with Miss Sarah Lee, coach of Leontyne Price and Todd Duncan.

After a year she will enter the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston for a full four-year college course with intense vocal instruction from Maestro Goldovsky.

CHARLOTTE GIBSON
Shouts of Bravo

ELECTRIFYING
Mezzo Shirley Verrett

NEAR-PERFECT

Verrett A Mezzo of Rare Talent

By RICHARD WILLIAMS
Atlanta Constitution Music Critic

It must be hard for a performer to make a debut that has the critics on both sides of the Atlantic searching for new superlatives.

Harder still to follow that with a series of apperances both here and abroad of such stunning impact that audiences and reviewers alike are wont to try their meager vocabularies to describe them.

Hardest of all: to undertake a concert tour receiving notices such as many artists only dream of pasting in their scrapbooks.

CAN IT BE DONE?

How can a performer possibly keep it up? How can he keep such consistency in his work? How can he continue to add honors upon honors when most of the world's foremost critics their meager vocabularies to describe them.

Hardest of all: to undertake a concert tour receiving notices such as many artists only dream of pasting in their scrapbooks.

CAN IT BE DONE?

How can a performer possibly keep it up? How can he keep such consistency in his work? How can he continue to add honors upon honors when most of the world's foremost critics and musicians are already at his feet? How can he keep living up to his reputation?

The answer is easy . . . if the artist happens to be Shirley Verrett.

Remember that name. If you haven't heard it before, you'll be hearing it from now on.

Leonard Bernstein, Josef Krips, Thomas Schippers, Leopold Stokowski . . . each has singled out Miss Verrett for starring roles with his individual orchestra. Igor Stravinsky asked her to perform in one of his own works under his baton.

THEY HEAR IT

The soundness and authority of their taste were reaffirmed with Miss Verrett's appearance Thursday night in Davage Auditorium at Clark College.

Miss Verrett displayed her dazzling mezzo soprano to an enthusiastic audience. Displayed? She shared it with each and every listener . . . for the personal quality of her rich voice is a tangible, electric thing, reaching out and enveloping, drawing the listener into the composer's very meaning and emotions. Every composer should be so lucky as to have hed sing his melodies. As it is we were treated only to Mahler's Song of the Wayfarer.

Perfection is such an absolute and final word, without qualification. Yet it is the only one that comes to mind when discussing Miss Verrett's control, diction, stage presence.

WHAT TO EXPECT

The glimpse we had of her acting ability—as she caught the passion, fire and tenderness of Mahler's work—gives promise to what we can expect when she steps onto the operatic stage.

Oh, yes. The Atlanta Symphony also performed Thursday night. Maestro Henry Sopkin led them through an appropriately brassy and thundering reading of Wagner's Prelude to Act II of Lohengrin; a satisfying interpretation of Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and a toe-tapping, rollicking Rodeo Suite by Copland.

But the evening belonged unequivocally to Shirley Verrett. If you weren't there, she sings again Saturday night. As the saying goes, "A word to the wise . . ."

DECATHLON TAKEN BY RAFE JOHNSON

American First by 58 Points —Elliott Captures 1,500— Davis Wins 400-Meter

By ALLISON DANZIG

Special to The New York Times.

ROME, Sept. 6—Herb Elliott and Otis Davis today ran the two most fantastic races probably ever seen on the same day in the Olympic Games.

Elliott, Australia's 22-year-old wonder runner, sped 1,500 meters 3 minutes 35.6 seconds, the equivalent of a 3:52.6 mile, in winning the final.

With this almost incredible performance, in which he took lead 500 meters from the finish, utterly crushed all opposition and won by nearly 30 yards, Elliott broke his own world record of 3:36. It was made in 1958, his year of glory, when he also set the existing world record of 3:54.5 for the mile.

The tremendously thrilling run of the lithe, hawk-faced youth from Down Under followed half an hour after Davis had electrified 60,000 spectators in Stadio Olympico with another world record-breaking display of flawless running speed.

Gasps of astonishment went up when it was announced that the 28-year-old former University of Oregon student from Los Angeles had lowered the record by three-tenths of second in winning the 400-meter final in 0:44.9. The old record was 0:45.2, made by Lou Jones of Manhattan College in 1956.

Davis Jumps for Joy

Davis was so overcome with happiness that he jubilantly jumped up and down and waved his arms above his head to the acclaim of the cheering crowd.

The two unforgettable races with their fabulous clockings surpassed in interest even so big an event as the decathlon, traditionally a top attraction of the games.

Tonight, after more than twenty-six hours of exhausting competition, Rafer Johnson of Kingsburg, Calif., was crowned as the winner of the punishing two-day, ten-event test of versatility, speed, skill and strength.

In an excruciatingly close fight with C. K. Yang of Taiwan, the powerful world record-holder managed to finish on top by 58 points. Johnson's total was 8,392 points, an Olympic record but under the world mark of 8,683 points he set in winning the combined Amateur Athletic Union championship and United States Olympic trials in July.

Yang was second with 8,334 points and Vasily Kuznetsov of the Soviet Union, the former of Manhattan College in 1956.

Davis Jumps for Joy

Davis was so overcome with happiness that he jubilantly jumped up and down and waved his arms above his head to the acclaim of the cheering crowd.

The two unforgettable races with their fabulous clockings surpassed in interest even so big an event as the decathlon, traditionally a top attraction of the games.

Tonight, after more than twenty-six hours of exhausting competition, Rafer Johnson of Kingsburg, Calif., was crowned as the winner of the punishing two-day, ten-event test of versatility, speed, skill and strength.

In an excruciatingly close fight with C. K. Yang of Taiwan, the powerful world record-holder managed to finish on top by 58 points. Johnson's total was 8,392 points, an Olympic record but under the world mark of 8,683 points he set in winning the combined Amateur Athletic Union championship and United States Olympic trials in July.

Yang was second with 8,334 points and Vasily Kuznetsov of the Soviet Union, the former world record-holder, third with 7,809.

In the A. A. U. championship, Johnson defeated Yang by 258 points. The Chinese youth was handicapped by an injury in the final event—the 1,500-meter run—then, and it was thought that he might well defeat Johnson this time.

Yang Better in 7 Events

He topped Johnson in seven of the ten events here, but he could not quite overcome Johnson's superiority in the shot-put, discus throw, and javelin throw.

Yang held his head in dejection when they finished the decathlon 1,500-meter run. He finished 4 yards ahead of Johnson in a race in which both were wabbling and barely able to keep their feet under them to the last killing stride. But Yang's margin was not enough to make up his point deficit.

Johnson failed to break his world record because his inability to equal his performances in the A. A. U. meet in seven of the ten events. It was all the more to his credit that despite this he still was able to overcome so formidable a challenger as Yang.

Johnson's courage pulled him through the final event when it seemed that he might well be beaten.

After so long and wearing an ordeal, running 1,500 yards was a heavy burden for one of his size and weight. He hung on grimly at Yang's heels, and the Chinese youth could not shake him off.

Johnson Hangs On

As they moved into the stretch, Yang, summoning his last bit of strength, drew away, but Johnson never let him get more than four or five yards ahead. Johnson's victory was assured as he kept within that distance to the tape.

The other gold medal in track and field was won by Jozef Schmidt of Poland in the hop, step and jump. He set an Olympic record and broke his listed world record by leaping 55 feet 1 ¾ inches.

Al Oerter of West Babylon, L. I., also set an Olympic mark by throwing the discus 191 feet 8¾ inches in qualifying for the final. Rink Babka of Manhattan Beach, Calif., and Dick Cochran of Brookfield, Mo., also qualified.

Ira Davis of Philadelphia was leading for the silver medal in the hop, step and jump but then lost second place to Vladimir Goriaev of the Soviet Union. On the last jump, Vitola Kreer of the Soviet Union barely beat Davis for the bronze medal.

In qualifying heats for the women's 800-meter run, the winners of three successive heats broke the Olympic record.

The United States won five gold medals during the day and clinched a sixth. The winners, in addition to Otis Davis and Johnson, were three free-style wrestlers from Oklahoma—Terry McCann, a bantamweight a magnificent job" and would be called upon for advice and help in the future.

Negro Heads USIA

(Continued from page one)

"You leave with the thanks of a grateful President and a grateful nation," Mr. Johnson said, and then concluded his letter: "I close, Ed, with a paraphrase of the words you made forever famous on radio and television: 'Good by, and good luck.'"

Mr. Murrow flew to La Jolla, Calif., Tuesday night, a USIA spokesman said. The former director told associates he wants to spend some time in the sun.

Mr. Murrow called the USIA and dictated the following statement on his successor: "Carl Rowan knows the news business, he knows the USIA and he knows the world in which we live. I am sure he will do an excellent job."

Mr. Johnson, in turn, praised Mr. Rowan in a statement as "eminently qualified to supervise this vital program of telling America's story abroad."

He described him as "a perceptor of world affairs," an effective diplomat and tireless worker in trying to improve America's image abroad.

Mr. Rowan, asked to comment on his appointment and Mr. Johnson's words, said:

"I shall strive to merit his trust as I seek, with my colleagues, to have the world understand both what the United States is and what it strives to be."

Mr. Rowan is a native of Ravenscroft, Tenn. He grew up in McMinnville, Tenn., and attended Tennessee State University at Nashville a year before joining the Navy in World War II. At 19 he was one of the first 15 Negroes commissioned in the Navy.

After the war he took a bachelor's degree in mathematics at Oberlin (Ohio) College and a master's in journalism at the University of Minnesota in 1948. He gained prominence as a reporter for the Minneapolis Tribune, winning a number of national awards.

In February, 1961, he became an Assistant Secretary of State, going from that position to his post in Finland.

His new assignment requires Senate confirmation.

WELTNER

Continued from Page 1

the benefit of bail and of a speedy trial.

"By directing his officers to disregard federal writs, he has left one hapless defendant a pawn in a conflict of powers.

"I DO NOT argue the innocence of these defendants. I do not condone their actions, nor would I justify their motives. I do not approve their associations or their political persuasions.

"But, as American citizens, they are entitled to the full protection of the law. They are innocent until proven guilty. They are entitled to a speedy trial and to reasonable bail.

"Courts are of especial dignity and should never be criticized for light or transient causes. Yet, here, the machinery of the law, designed as the servant of justice, has been manipulated so as to become its oppressor. And none can speak without jeopardy of contempt.

"Such a train of events must not go unchallenged. My community must not, by an imposed silence, be charged with the conduct of a single judge. Nor must men of good will be without a spokesman when justice has been denied."

Negro Girl Wins Legion Orator Test

A 17-year-old high school girl, the first Negro ever to win the American Legion oratorical contest in Georgia, says she will "try her best" to win the national contest.

Linda Housch, a senior at Booker T. Washington High School and the daughter of a minister, won first place in the state contest Wednesday night in Savannah. Three other contestants were white and they spoke before an all-white panel of judges.

Miss Housch spoke on "The privileges and responsibilities of an American citizen." Her home is 1060 Ollie Circle, NW.

In her speech she said that "for every privilege an American holds, there is a reciprocal responsibility."

IT WAS THE first time in recent years that the state contest has been integrated. In past years, there were two contests, one for whites, one for Negroes. The state level was as far as the Negro contests went.

A major privilege and responsibility of every American is "to obtain the optimum education and to make the best possible use of our freedom," Miss Housch said in her talk.

She will represent the Georgia American Legion at the national regionals April 6 in Columbia, S.C., where she will compete against state winners from Florida, Alabama and South Carolina. The winner of the national regionals will go on the to the national sectionals, and then the national finals.

Miss Housch received $150 for winning the state contest.

Harold Martin

Maud's Poems Touch the Heart

The fame of Maud McGehee's poetry is spreading far, and her little book of verse has now gone into its third printing. Mrs. Frank Mack, of 2750 Northside Dr., who gave voice to Maud's simple, powerful, clear-as-spring-water verse, writes in to quote from a letter she received from Archibald Rutledge, who had seen Maud's little volume, called "To Get My Name in the Kingdom Book."

Mr. Rutledge, who is himself a poet of renown, wrote that Maud's "Kingdom Book" is full of poignant beauty and truth. Please tell the author that in her poems she has touched my heart many times —and as Samuel Johnson said: 'To touch one human heart is an event of immense spiritual significance.' "

Mr. Rutledge then sent on to Maud McGehee, the old Negro woman with the shining heart, a copy of one of his own poems from his new book "Deep River."

Black Sue Alston's taught me well
How to save my soul from hell
And I listen to her voice,
For it makes my heart rejoice
Thus to find her seeing through Thunder clouds to sky that's blue Darkness to the light that's true.

Maud will like that poem that Mr. Rutledge sent her. And many people will like Maud's newest poem, which Mrs. Mack sent to me. Its title is "Don't Leave Nobody Out":

I am not a talker,
None ever heard me shout,
But I keep busy in my heart
I don't leave nobody out,
Nobody, Lord,
nobody out,
Don't leave
nobody out.

I pray for friends,
I pray for foes,
I pray for the whole
wide world.
I pray for everybody's woes,

I don't leave nobody out,
Nobody, Lord,
nobody out,
I don't leave
nobody out.

Hoffman, and Madam Butterfly.

Leonard Warren's singing of Rigoletto dominated — indeed, overwhelmed — the familiar but ever-fresh Verdi opera.

That is as it should be, to be sure, since the tragic jester is hardly ever off the stage, and the whole tragedy is supremely his. But Mr. Warren's pre-eminence was perhaps a shade more noticeable than on other occasions because of a certain unevenness in a couple of the other main roles. Roberta Peters seemed strained and vocally ill at ease at times—except, oddly, in some of the trickiest arias, such as the beloved "Caro Nome"; then her coloratura was radiant. Eugenio Fernandi, making his Met debut as the Duke, revealed an acceptable though scarcely exceptional tenor.

But in Mr. Warren's mastery there was never a doubt. It was not only his massive, wide-ranging voice—capable, it seemed, of expressing every conceivable nuance — but also his highly professional acting.

Inspired orchestral conducting and fine singing marked Les Contes d' Hoffman.

Jean Morel, a Frenchman, conducted this very French work by Offenbach with both delicacy and verve. Rarely, if ever, have its magic tunes been displayed with better showmanship, and rarely if ever has the music that ties the tunes together been lovelier.

Nicolai Gedda sang Hoffman with a true and lyric tenor voice. Mattiwilda Dobbs was both precise and pleasing in the coloratura of the mechanical doll; Rosalind Elias contributed richly to the part of Giulietta, and Lucine Amra's sweet notes were perfect for the pathetic Antonia.

George London was more magnificent than ever in his four roles as Hoffman's contriving and superhuman quartet of adversaries.

The season's first Madam Butterfly brought forth much that is best in opera at The Met. Victoria De Los Angeles as Butterfly created a highly competent singing and acting performance which had flashes of true artistic brilliance. Conducting his first Butterfly at The Met, Erich Leinsdorf provided a careful musical direction.

A point of interest to opera lovers was the debut of Barry Morell. American tenor, in the male lead role of Lieutenant Benjamin Franklin Pinkerton, U.S.N. Mr. Morell brings a good personal appearance and some acting proficiency. His voice, while of good pitch and quality, at times seemed a little lost in the great opera house. It may well be however, that this merely represents a more restrained interpretation of the role of Pinkerton, rather long overdue.

—E. S. B.

NATIVE ATLANTAN

Mattiwilda Dobbs Sings Impeccably

By CHAPPELL WHITE
Atlanta Journal Music Critic

Mattiwilda Dobbs, a native Atlantan who has achieved an international reputation as a coloratura soprano, replaced the ill Birgit Nilsson on Marvin McDonald's concert series Monday night and presented a program that displayed an impeccable vocal technique.

Mattiwilda Dobbs

Miss Dobbs' voice is perhaps a little small to be heard at its best in the Municipal Auditorium, but it is beautifully clear and her control is almost flawless. She can negotiate the most difficult arabesques with grace and apparent ease; her tone is always pure and her floating half-voice in the upper register is the accomplishment of a true vocal artist.

IN THE MAIN, the program was unhackned, but it did not entirely avoid the kind of musican emphasis that plagues most coloratura's recitals.

Such works as Bishop's "Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark," Benedict's "La Capinera," and Proch's "Theme and Variations" are little more than vocal exercises attached to commonplace melodies. Interest in them lagged quickly, no matter how beautiful the execution.

Unfortunately these were the works in which Miss Dobbs had the collaboration of Julius Baker on the flute. Mr. Baker is an outstanding artist, and it is a pity we could not have heard him in something more substantial. Even the mad scene from Lucia gave little that was worthy of his talents.

BUT OTHERWISE, Miss Dobbs' program was musically rewarding. There was a charming group by Chabrier, two beautiful songs by Granados, and a portion of "Bachianas Brazileiras Number 5" by Villa Lobos. American opera was well represented by a fine aria from Douglas Moore's "Ballad of Baby Doe" and a light selection from Menotti's comedy, "The Telephone."

Occasionally one might wish for a little more warmth and drama in Miss Dobbs' delivery, but throughout the evening she sang with good taste and a straightforward feeling for musical lines. She never offends the ear or the musical sensibilities. Restraint and musicianship are rare and valued virtues for a coloratura.

Willard Sektberg was her able collaborator at the piano.

Associated Press

McCovey: Hottest of the Giants

BASEBALL:

Willie the Wonder

Suddenly, when San Franciscans asked last week, "How'd Willie do today?", they didn't mean Mays. They meant a 6-foot-4, 200-pound first baseman named Willie McCovey. The answer, every day, was the same: "Willie did just fine." Unknown only two weeks ago, Willie McCovey, the newest San Francisco Giant, was now the hottest prospect in the major leagues.

In his first ten games, McCovey, 21, promoted from Phoenix, slammed fifteen hits (for an average of .375), crashed four home runs, and personally accounted for three victories that helped keep the Giants in first place.

A left-handed batter whose strength, like Hank Aaron's, lies in his wrists, McCovey was taking his new fame in stride. "This San Francisco's a great town," the cheerful Alabaman enthused. "Lots of movies. Lots of movies I haven't seen. This sure beats Phoenix. I saw all the movies in Phoenix."

BASEBALL:

You Can Go Home Again

Natty in a gray-and-red striped suit, the heavily muscled ballplayer arrived early and alone at the Polo Grounds one evening last week, quickly signed four autographs, and headed straight for the home-team dressing room. Then, Willie Mays suddenly stopped, laughed, and turned into the visitors' dressing room. "Guess I forgot," said Mays. He was back with the San Francisco Giants at the Polo Grounds for the first time since moving to the West Coast in 1958. "I've never been in this dressing room before. Man, it's been a long time."

At 31, Willie Mays, who first played at the Polo Grounds with the Birmingham Black Barons of the Negro league in 1947 and later with the Giants from 1951-57, was home again. Earlier in the day, he had visited his lawyer (who is trying to unsnag financial problems that have cut Mays' reported $90,000 earnings to a net of less than $15,000 a year) and dropped in at a Harlem barbershop, Small's Paradise (a nightclub partly owned by basketball player Wilt Chamberlain), and a pool hall (where he shot "a couple games of 8 ball").

Inside the dressing room, Mays looked at a dozen messages (including notes from Roy Campanella and Monte Irvin), made three phone calls, and joked with the three dozen photographers and reporters who crowded around him next to his locker.

"How does it feel to be back?" asked one writer.

"Man," said Willie Mays in his high-pitched squeal, "I haven't been back here too long."

"What do you think of President Kennedy's farm program?" asked an inquiring photographer.

Dignified in his undershorts and religious medal, Mays, for the first time since arriving at the ballpark, turned solemn, then answered: "No comment."

The Best: "Have you missed New York?" another writer asked.

"Sure I have," he said, chewing on two sticks of gum. "I was very happy here. But playing every day you don't get much chance to think about things like that. Sure I'm a little nervous. Good things happened to me here. The best? That first hit [after going hitless in his first twelve major-league at-bats, Mays homered off Warren Spahn] and my catch off Vic Wertz in the 1954 World Series against Cleveland."

As Mays finished dressing, the team bus arrived—and with it former Giant pitcher Johnny Antonelli, now in the tire business. "Hey, Willie, never knew you were a fighter," said Antonelli, referring to Mays' fight with New York Met shortstop Elio Chacon six days earlier.

Newsweek—Tony Rollo

Mays: 'Man, it's been a long time'

"I always thought you were only a center fielder, Buck."

"I'm no fighter," Buck Mays grinned. "I'm like you, Johnny—a lover."

Outside, Mays posed for pictures in front of the bleachers for fifteen minutes ("Hey, when you going to give me a chance to play ball?"), clowned around during infield practice, and finally moved into the batting cage against Antonelli, who was pitching. On the first seven pitches, Mays' best was a grounder to deep short. "You just got too much stuff for me, Johnny," he shouted. Then he was the Mays whom the screaming 44,451 fans remembered—sending three fast balls high into the upper grandstand in left field, more than 350 feet away. "Johnny, you're going to have to start buying us some balls," Mays said.

The Difference: Once the game started, Mays continued his hitting. In five at-bats, Mays, the National League's leading home-run hitter, hit his seventeenth homer and added a single as the Giants defeated the New York Mets, 9-6, to remain in a tie for first place in the National League with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

After the game, more than 30 writers and photographers turned the dressing room into a circus. "No, man, I didn't hear nobody screaming," he said. "It always feels good to hit a homer, but what was so different about this one? I've hit plenty before. If I went 0-for-4, it wouldn't have made any difference. Just playing in New York made me feel great. Man, this was my home." Nearly an hour later, Mays was still in his shorts and still surrounded by newsmen. "It's great being back," he said, "but where the hell is the shower?" Back home, at 31, Willie Mays was somewhat older, but still a boy.

PEOPLE OF THE WEEK

CONTINUED

PICKED TO TELL THE U. S. STORY ABROAD

President Johnson's choice to take charge of America's official image-making machinery—the U. S. Information Agency—is Carl T. Rowan.

Mr. Rowan has been nominated to succeed Edward R. Murrow, who has resigned as USIA Director because of his health. Senate confirmation would make Mr. Rowan one of the highest-ranking Negroes in the Government. He would meet with the National Security Council, where U. S. world policy is often set.

—USN&WR Photo

Carl Rowan, as USIA Director, will sit in on Security Council meetings

Mr. Rowan is 38. Born and raised in poverty in Tennessee, he became, at 19, one of the first Negro naval officers in U. S. history. He rose to prominence as a reporter and foreign correspondent for "The Minneapolis Tribune" and as the author of several books.

President Kennedy named him a Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs in 1961, and Ambassador to Finland in 1963.

Early in his Washington career, Mr. Rowan was rejected for membership in the exclusive Cosmos Club of Washington. Several club members — including some high-ranking Government officials —resigned in protest. President Kennedy's name was withdrawn from the list of proposed new members.

In 1961, Mr. Rowan accompanied Vice President Johnson on a round-the-world tour. The men reportedly disagreed at times, but developed a high regard for each other. Last year, Ambassador Rowan played a large role in Mr. Johnson's tour of Scandinavia. In announcing the nomination, President Johnson said of Mr. Rowan: "I need him here."

·Associated Press radiophoto

MAN OF THE CENTURY—Bob Hayes, of the United States team, streaks across finish line to win the 100-yard dash during the track meet with the British in London yesterday in the time of 9.5 seconds. Ron Jones (right) of England was second with teammate Berwyn Jones (center) third.

A Negro to Project Our Image . . .

By United Press International

WASHINGTON.

Carl T. Rowan, 38, was sworn in yesterday as director of the U. S. Information Agency. President Johnson officiated at a White House ceremony which officially made Mr. Rowan the highest ranking Negro in the government. The former Minneapolis newsman, a native of Ravenscroft, Tenn., resigned as Ambassador to Finland to take the information agency directorship.

Mr. Rowan succeeds Edward R. Murrow who resigned after undergoing lung surgery.

At the swearing-in, Mr. Johnson gave a three-word directive: "Tell the truth."

Mr. Rowan's response was "Mr. President, that's all I know how to do."

Herald Tribune—UPI telephoto

A NEW JOB for Carl T. Rowan, who embraces his sons Geoffrey, left, and Carl jr. beside his wife and President Johnson after being sworn as USIA chief yesterday.

. . . And a White Move to Bolster It

Associated Press wirephoto

A NEW HOME for the Mayor of Trenton, N. J., Arthur J. Holland, who with his wife, Elizabeth, holds daughter Cynthia as new Negro neighbor extends her hand.

By Albin Krebs

Of The Herald Tribune Staff

TRENTON.

Mayor Arthur J. Holland yesterday completed his own personal plan for urban renewal—"reverse block-busting." He moved his wife and infant daughter into an old house the Hollands have bought in Trenton's predominantly Negro and Puerto Rican section.

A group of about 75 of his new neighbors, mostly Negroes, lined the sidewalk across from his house at 138 Mercer St. when Mr. Holland drove up in his black 1962 Bel Air. There were smiles on every face, and a few people cheered.

There to record the move were television cameras and two dozen reporters and photographers. Mr. Holland, an amiable, personable man, still seemed mildly shocked that his decision to move into the once-grand neighborhood, and thus help stabilize the neighborhood racially, had captured the imagina-

More on MOVE—P 13

Wide, Wide World of Books

Baldwin's Essays Overshadow Novel on American Negro's Plight

And Then We Heard the Thunder (Knopf; 485 pages; $5.95) is perceptive and engrossing, but, for an ironic reason, is quite likely to be widely unread. Unfortunately for the author, John Oliver Killens, his novel is being published almost simultaneously with a book of two essays by James Baldwin entitled The Fire Next Time (Dial Press; 120 pages; $3.50).

Both books are spirited statements by gifted Negro writers on the position of the Negro in American life, so strikingly alike that there is probably not enough room for both on the best-seller lists.

Considering the impact of fiction, it might seem that Mr. Killens' novel would have the better of the contest. The nature of a novelist's medium—especially his freedom to heighten and embroider and emphasize experience — apparently enables him to capture meaningful essences more memorably than any essayist can.

What work of non-fiction, for example, expresses the '20s as compellingly as Scott Fitzgerald's fiction? Is there an essay more expressive of the '30s than John Steinbeck's Grapes of Wrath? Where is the essay on World War II that compares with any one of a half dozen novels?

The Child Waits in Terror

Yet it is obvious that no novelist, including James Baldwin himself, has etched a more indelible, or more frightening, picture of the essence of being a Negro in a white society than Mr. Baldwin's "Letter From a Region in My Mind." This essay, which makes up half of The Fire Next Time, first appeared in the Nov. 17 issue of the New Yorker. It was a classic a week after publication. That issue of the magazine has become a collector's item.

Although it is not possible to recreate the tenor of Mr. Baldwin's controlled but impassioned essay, some sense of its effect is available from this passage:

"Every effort made by the child's elders to prepare him for a fate from which they cannot protect him causes him secretly, in terror, to begin to await, without knowing that he is doing so, his mysterious and inexorable punishment. He must be 'good' not only in order to please his parents and not only to avoid being punished by them; behind their authority stands another, nameless and impersonal, infinitely harder to please, and bottomlessly cruel.

"And this filters into the child's consciousness through his parents' tone of voice as he is being exhorted, punished, or loved; in the sudden, uncontrollable note of fear heard in his mother's or his father's voice when he has strayed beyond some particular boundary. He does not know what the boundary is, and he can get no explanation of it, which is frightening enough, but the fear he hears in the voices of his elders is more frightening still.

"The fear that I heard in my father's voice, for example, when he realized that I really believed I could do anything a white boy could do, and had every intention of proving it, was not at all like the fear I heard when one of us was ill or had fallen down the stairs or strayed too far from the house. It was another fear, a fear that the child, in challenging the white world's assumptions, was putting himself in the path of destruction."

Mr. Killens

Mr. Baldwin

Matched against the cool fury of Mr. Baldwin's intensely personal essays, parts of Mr. Killens' novel seem a bit contrived. Sensual scenes at the length Killens plays them are somehow beside the point in a novel so deeply concerned with the human condition. Mr. Baldwin is telling how it is to be a Negro; Mr. Killens is often luring readers.

A Creator of Situations

The comparison is inevitable, but it is also unfortunate. For the most part, Mr. Killens is a sensitive writer.

The basic story of And Then We Heard the Thunder is impressively simple. A handsome, intelligent Negro named Solly Saunders becomes a soldier at the beginning of World War II. He is bent on winning all the success available to a Negro in the military, perhaps even a commission, certain that he can put on a convincing semblance of a smile while he swallows whatever he must. He cannot. Soon he is fighting for justice for the black man in the peculiarly white world of the United States Army quite as fiercely as he fights the more conventional war in the Pacific.

It is a convincing tale, although Mr. Killens is not so much a creator of character—only Solly Saunders comes alive; the others are vague figures—as he is a creator of situations. Page after page the reader watches the scene of the moment, arrested by the author's ability to show. It is essentially a technique of drama, but it is altogether winning.

If this novel gets the readership it deserves, there may be outraged protests from the South and from the Army about the picture Mr. Killens presents of the life of a Negro soldier in a Southern camp; but this reviewer, a white Southerner, derived an uncomfortable feeling of stark reality from it. Certainly, the drawn-out vignette of Solly Saunders' effort to return, AWOL, to camp from a nearby Southern town contains a quality of unhappy truth.

More likely, though, no one will be paying that much attention. James Baldwin's The Fire Next Time is so certain to overshadow And Then We Heard the Thunder that Mr. Killens may have the feeling his book was not actually published but smuggled into print.

—WILLIAM L. RIVERS

Martha Swope

Mitchell and Kent in 'Agon': They offer dances to think by

Rebel's Return

Through sheer coincidence, Soviet culture in the past month had been exposed to two American citizens who left Russia in artistic rebellion many years ago, and who were now world-famous for their work and their impact on contemporary art. The first to return was 80-year-old Igor Stravinsky, back after an absence of 48 years. Last week, it was George Balanchine, the 58-year-old artistic director of the New York City Ballet, coming back after 38 years away from the land of his birth.

As a tribute to Balanchine's position as the foremost innovator of Western ballet, the New York City Ballet's entire three-week stand in Moscow was sold out even before the company opened. Whether the customers looked on with appreciation as well as respect and curiosity was questionable after the opening last week. Russian balletomanes are accustomed to long, lavish, old-fashioned ballets which tell a story. Balanchine, on the other hand, does not like anything to distract from the severely abstract patterns he designs for his dancers.

The opening program—"Serenade," "Interplay" (choreography by Jerome Robbins), "Agon," and "Western Symphony"—offered no compromise. "Agon," for example—with music by Stravinsky—is perhaps the most difficult ballet to dance in the modern repertory because of its unbelievably intricate rhythms. But as confusing as the Russians found "Agon," they burst into applause for a brilliant performance of its stunning pas de deux by the company's Negro star, Arthur Mitchell, and his ballerina, Allegra Kent. Mitchell was singled out for prolonged applause again at the end; Balanchine, too, received an ovation.

Bolshoi ballerina Olga Lepeshinskaya, reflecting the conservative hierarchy, praised Balanchine for his "great professional mastery," but found "Agon" too tough to take. "I do not like that kind of art where I have to think. I like that kind which the heart feels immediately."

Balanchine himself was heartened by the intense interest shown by young students and workers who attended two later performances during the week. "I never expected the Russians to jump from the rooftops or wave their hats in the air," he summed up. "I didn't come here to woo them or wow them. But I think they like us. And I am pleased."

Discards Often Become Aces

Scrapbook Got Him NFL Test

Clutching a large object wrapped in brown paper, the well-proportioned young man marched confidently into the office of the National Football League's Los Angeles Rams.

"I'd like to see the head scout," he told a rather startled secretary.

In the inner office, Eddie Kotal looked up as the brash, young man was ushered in. "What can I do for you?" Kotal asked.

"Give me a job with the Rams," came the blunt reply, "I'm a football player."

Kotel sized up the broad-shouldered youth with the slim hips and strong legs. Certainly looked like a football player.

"Where'd you play college ball?" The Ram's scout asked.

"Scottsbluff Junior College. It's in Nebraska," said the athlete as he reached for the large object at his side, tore off the brown paper and placed a well-worn scrapbook on the desk.

"It's all in there . . . everything I've ever done," he announced proudly.

Kotel leafed through the pages, and made up his mind to take a chance on a hunch. He pulled a contract from the drawer and turned it over to the young man, who hurriedly affixed the signature "Dick Lane."

Dick (Night Train) Lane was an immediate defensive sensation in the NFL, setting a league record in his rookie year by intercepting 14 passes. He since has moved on and currently is with the Detroit Lions in his 11th season in the NFL.

Lane's story is just one of many that can be told about unknown players and small college stars who have made it big in the NFL.

Dick Lane, 'Night Train' nearly ruined the best

There was considerable apprehension some other club might spring a surprise and beat them to the rangy pass catcher.

But on the 15th round, the Bears named Hill. The rest is in the NFL record books.

What about this year?

From coast to coast top-flight material in the small schools is being thoroughly checked by pro scouts.

Among the talented seniors are Joe Iacone of West Chester, (Pa.) State; Nate Craddock of Parsons; Erv Olson of Cathage; Roy Curry of Jackson State; Jerry Linton of Panhandle A&M; Dan Boals of Iowa State College and John MacArthur of Los Angeles Pacific.

There are, of course, many other Saturday heroes in the smaller colleges and some of them could join illustrious company.

A host of still-active NFL players come from small schools. Four, in fact, never played college ball: Defensive tackle Gene (Big Daddy) Lipscomb of Pittsburgh, defensive tackle John Gonzaga of Detroit, defensive halfback Al Hall of Los Angeles and halfback Tom Wilson of Cleveland.

Among the league standouts who made their way to stardom from small colleges are four players each with more than 10 years' experience. No. 1 on that roster is Baltimore fullback Joe Perry, a Compton, (Calif.), graduate, marking his 14th year in the play-for-pay ranks.

Andy Robustelli, New York defensive end, has spent 12 years with the Rams and Giants since leaving now-defunct Arnold College in Connecticut.

nounced proudly.

Kotel leafed through the pages, and made up his mind to take a chance on a hunch. He pulled a contract from the drawer and turned it over to the young man, who hurriedly affixed the signature "Dick Lane."

Dick (Night Train) Lane was an immediate defensive sensation in the NFL, setting a league record in his rookie year by intercepting 14 passes. He since has moved on and currently is with the Detroit Lions in his 11th season in the NFL.

Lane's story is just one of many that can be told about unknown players and small college stars who have made it big in the NFL.

And it's a story that likely will be repeated at the upcoming pro football drafts —next Saturday for the American League and a week from Monday, Dec. 3, for the NFL.

There's bound to be some surprise selections—there always are. Some of today's top NFL stars were picked way down the list.

Roosevelt Brown, offensive tackle for the New York Giants and one of the league's outstanding linemen, was a 27th round pick in 1953 after finishing his college career at Morgan State.

Pete Retzlaff, pass-catching standout for the Philadelphia Eagles was originally selected by Detroit, on the 22nd round. He attended South Dakota State College.

Retzlaff's teammate, halfback Tim Brown from Ball State, Ind., was a No. 27 choice. Halfback John Morris of Santa Barbara went on the 12th round to Chicago.

J. D. Smith, fleet San Francisco back who played his college ball at North Carolina A&T, was drafted by the Bears on the 15th round—as a defensive specialist.

Dick Lane—'Night Train' nearly missed the boat.

Dallas' J. W. Lockett was overlooked in the draft after graduating from Central State, Okla., and signed on as a free agent.

The classic example concerns Harlon Hill, who turned into one of the game's finest ends after the Chicago Bears selected him in 1953.

The Hill story starts at the Blue-Gray football game in Montgomery, Ala., where scout Clark Shaughnessy settled down to watch the many highly touted players.

An old buddy dropped into the seat next to Shaughnessy and remarked about the talent on the field.

"Tell you something though," said the friend, "the best football player in the whole darned South isn't here today."

"Is that so," a curious Shaughnessy replied. "Who is he?"

"Fellow by the name of Harlon Hill," came the answer. "He plays for Florence State Teachers. He's an end . . . a great one."

"Florence State Teachers!" repeated an astonished Shaughnessy. "Where is Florence State Teachers?"

The friend said it was in Alabama, and Shaughnessy, never one to pass up a lead, made a note about Hill. When he returned to Chicago, he and coach George Halas wrote to Florence State Teachers for game films.

After the first viewing session, one of the onlookers raved, "This kid's good enough to draft on the first round. What a find!"

"Not so fast," cautioned Halas. "I think we can hide Hill for a while and pick him later on. If we never heard of Florence State Teachers —and Harlon Hill—you can bet no one else has either.

"If we play our cards right, we can draft the players we've already decided on, and still land Hill."

At the draft session, the tension mounted as the Bears held Hill's selection back.

fensive tackle John Gonzaga of Detroit, defensive halfback Al Hall of Los Angeles and halfback Tom Wilson of Cleveland.

Among the league standouts who made their way to stardom from small colleges are four players each with more than 10 years' experience. No. 1 on that roster is Baltimore fullback Joe Perry, a Compton, (Calif.), graduate, marking his 14th year in the play-for-pay ranks.

Andy Robustelli, New York defensive end, has spent 12 years with the Rams and Giants since leaving now-defunct Arnold College in Connecticut.

Lane and Ray Renfro, of Cleveland by way of North Texas State College, are in their 11th seasons.

Other small-college grads include Green Bay's Willie Davis (Grambling) and Fred Thurston (Valparaiso), Los Angeles' Ed Meador (Arkansas Tech), Baltimore's Odell Brasse (South Dakota) and Dee Mackey (East Texas State), and Chicago's Willie Galimore (Florida A&M).

And here's a point of hope for second-stringers: Take a look at the case of Ulmo Shannon Randle, better known as Sonny Randle of the St. Louis Cardinals.

In 1957, Randle was an obscure, alternate halfback at the University of Virginia.

In one game he caught 14 passes for 158 yards, an impressive performance; but spread out over 10 games it didn't help — and Randle wound up averaging 1.4 catches a game.

Says Randle:

"I wasn't much of a blocker, and tackling wasn't my strong point. But I've always had good speed and hands."

One of the Cardinal scouts noticed the "good speed and hands." Randle was drafted 19th after the 1957 season, even though he still had one more year of college eligibility. In 1958, Dick Voris took over at Virginia, and told Sonny: "You're my wingback."

"That's all I had to hear," Sonny recalls. "I knew then I had a chance to show my best."

"And he did," Voris agrees. And the Cardinals now possess one of the NFL's top pass-catchers.

So watch those names as they come out of the pro draft sessions . . . especially the names that appear well down the list—the ones that appear to be discards and sometimes turn out to be aces.

Leukemia Fatal to Syracuse All-American

Death Takes Ernie Davis

By Tommy Holmes
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

Ernie Davis, a great football player and a brave young man, died yesterday at Lakeside Hospital in Cleveland. The end, described as "peaceful," came at 2 a. m., but the news was withheld for hours until his family could be notified.

His family and friends were shocked because they had no idea that Ernie's battle against acute leukemia was so close to its almost inevitable end. There ise evidence, too, to support the belief that Davis himself was mercifully spared the dread knowledge.

As late as Wednesday Ernie was still working for a soft-drink bottling company in marketing and sales.

On Thursday, he dropped in at the offices of the Cleveland Browns and almost apologetically revealed that he was going to the hospital.

"I've felt better," he told Arthur B. Modell, the club president, "but there's nothing to worry about. My neck is swollen and my throat hurts a little."

If anything bothered Davis for the last 11 months, it was regret that he continued on the payroll for the Browns, for whom he was never able to play a game.

He had been signed by the Cleveland club at the highest price ever paid for a rookie in the National Football League, receiving a three-year contract for $80,000, including a $15,000 bonus.

The burden of his illness was something he carried within himself.

Over the 23 years of his brief span, Ernie Davis compiled a record of tremendous achievement as an athlete and as an inspiration to youth.

Born into a broken home Dec. 14, 1939, in Uniontown, Pa., Ernie lived with his grandparents until he was 13, when he joined his mother in Elmira, N. Y.

It was at Elmira Free Academy that his great ability as an athlete became manifest. He won every sectional honor in football, baseball and basketball.

Nearby Syracuse University was a natural landing place for Ernie when he was ready for higher education. Not alone because it was handy, but because of Jimmy Brown, the great all-around athlete who preceded him both at Syracuse and to the stardom with the Browns, that Davis never had a chance to reach.

Ben Schwartzwalder, the veteran Syracuse coach, called Davis the ideal football player, one that gave 100 per cent at all times.

"He could run with power, run with speed, catch a pass and kick," said Schwartzwalder yesterday, "and do all of these things superlatively well."

Davis sparked the Syracuse freshman team to its first unbeaten season in history, then took over Brown's old number 44 or three brilliant varsity years. He was the driving power to the 1959 national collegiate championship and an almost unanimous All-America choice in 1960 and 1961.

In varsity games at Syracuse, Davis churned out 2,496 yards on offense, scored 39 touchdowns and registered 220 points. The Elmira Express broke all of the

Herald Tribune—UPI

ERNIE DAVIS, Syracuse All-America, with his Heisman Trophy in 1961.

Herald Tribune—UPI

ERNIE DAVIS, Syracuse All-America, with his Heisman Trophy in 1961.

player, one that gave 100 per cent at all times.

"He could run with power, run with speed, catch a pass and kick," said Schwartzwalder yesterday, "and do all of these things superlatively well."

Davis sparked the Syracuse freshman team to its first unbeaten season in history, then took over Brown's old number 44 or three brilliant varsity years. He was the driving power to the 1959 national collegiate championship and an almost unanimous All-America choice in 1960 and 1961.

In varsity games at Syracuse, Davis churned out 2,496 yards on offense, scored 39 touchdowns and registered 220 points. The Elmira Express broke all of the great Brown's football records at the school and attained an honor that Jimmy never achieved.

In 1961 Davis became the first Negro ever to gain the Heisman Award, emblematic of recognition as the top college football player of the year.

The same day they handed Ernie that elegant piece of hardware at the Downtown A. C. he was received by President Kennedy at an appointment arranged at the request of the President.

"Two such thrills in one day are too much," Davis said. "First I receive the Heisman Trophy, not as an individual but as a member of the Syracuse team. Secondly, the President wished to meet me."

Professional football seemed an inevitable career for Davis although he was graduated as an economic major with marks well above average.

He turned down a big bid from the Buffalo Bills of the American Football League. The Washington Redskins originally had the NFL rights to deal with him, but traded those rights to the Cleveland club, eager to hook Davis up with Jimmy Brown, who had become his close friend.

Just a year ago, the way seemed paved for Brown and Davis to co-operate in a terrific one-two backfield punch for the Cleveland team. Unknown to anyone, the disease that cost Ernie his life was already at work and had been, doctors estimated, as early as April, 1962.

Last June 29 Davis played a good part of an East-West game at Buffalo and did not perform up to expectations. But he also had a minor ankle injury and nobody thought much about it. This was to be his last game.

About a month later Davis was training with the Browns and preparing for an appearance in the Chicago Tribune All-Star game. Obviously, he wasn't right and he complained of feeling overtired.

A doctor spotted something that caused him to order a thorough examination. When they finished, the announce-

More on DAVIS—P 2

PAGE (s) MISSING

A Guest at the Stadium

Herald Tribune—UPI

The greatest runner in pro football moves stage center this afternoon in Yankee Stadium where the Giants and Browns clash in the No. 1 game of the pro campaign to date. Will Jimmy Brown have one of his superdays, or will the Giants' defense, wise and tough, stop his rampaging in what promises to be his best season ever? Will Brown rush for more than 130 yards, as he did against the Giants the first time he faced them in '62, or will he be limited to one-third that total, the case the second time the teams clashed last year? Whatever the outcome, whatever Brown winds up with, the fans will be seeing something super-special, just as they have ever since Jimmy Brown exploded on the pro scene in 1957 after a memorable collegiate career at Syracuse. They'll see the "extra effort," that quality of forward movement after his seemingly being stopped, they'll see the grasp of sure-handed tacklers broken in a demonstration of controlled fury unparalled in the game today. Records? Jimmy Brown will break the all-time mark in the next game or two for total yardage. The figure is 8296. It took Joe Perry more than thirteen seasons to set it. Harold Rosenthal's story: Page 4.

Olympic

Next week 7000 athletes from 84 nations will compete in the Olympic Games. A noted sports authority sticks his neck out and predicts the winners.

Women's discus: Olga Fikotova Connolly, the 1956 Czech champion, works out under the eyes of her American husband, Harold, who is the hammer-throw favorite. She will compete for the United States this year.

High jump: Boston University's John Thomas holds the world's record with a 7-foot-3¾-inch leap at the July Olympic tryouts and is expected to take the title.

Pole vault: Don Bragg, who cleared a record 15 feet, 9¼ inches at the tryouts, will lead the strong U.S. vaulters at Rome.

100-meter dash: Ray Norton (left) should take this event and the 200-meter sprint. In tryouts he beat Olympic teammates Frank Budd (114) and Dave Sime (far right).

Decathlon: Top-ranked Rafer Johnson of the U.S. beat Russia's Vasiliy Kuznyetzov (right) in the 100-meter dash and went on to win the decathlon in Moscow in 1958.

SPEAKING OUT*

Bill Veeck has owned three American League baseball teams—the Cleveland Indians, St. Louis Browns and Chicago White Sox. As a youth, however, Veeck lived in a National League household. His father, Bill Veeck Sr., was president of the Chicago Cubs during the great days of Grover Cleveland Alexander.

THEY'VE WRECKED THE AMERICAN LEAGUE

The National League dominates the game of baseball, says a sharp-tongued ex-clubowner, because its rival is paying the penalty for prejudice, complacency and nearsighted management.

By Bill Veeck with Edward Linn

There was a time when you could have a lively argument over which of baseball's major leagues was superior. It was a standard, perennial topic. But no more. The question is now deader than Harold Stassen's campaign headquarters. The National League has become so superior over the past decade that baseball fans are left with little basis for continuing one of their favorite debates.

National League teams have won 6 out of the last 10 World Series and 12 out of 17 All-Star games played since 1950. Last year the Nationals outdrew the American League 11,382,000 to 9,094,000.

The clear dominance of the National League is not, as American League apologists like to claim, just a cyclical swing in the fortunes of war. It is actually the result of policies (and lack of policies) that have been pursued (or not pursued) over the past 15 years. Involved in the shift of power to the National League are problems of race, geography and high finance.

Last year the American League had four .300 hitters, all white. The National League had eleven .300 hitters, and 10 of them were Negroes. The American League had two hitters, both white, who batted in more than 100 runs; the National League had six, and five of them were Negroes. Each league had four men who had hit more than 30 home runs. In the American League, all four were white. In the National League, all were Negroes.

The shift of power actually began on the day in 1947 when Jackie Robinson, the first Negro to play in the majors, put on a Brooklyn uniform and went out to play first base for the Dodgers—and the Dodgers won the pennant. In the following two years, Robinson was joined by Roy Campanella and Don Newcombe. The Dodgers kept winning pennants—or losing them on the last day of the season—with Robinson, Campy and Newk earning five Most-Valuable-Player Awards among them.

In trying to compete with the Dodgers, most of the other National League clubs went scurrying around the Negro leagues in search of other Robinsons, other Campys, other Newks. Civil rights had nothing to do with it. Many Negroes just have stronger legs and faster reflexes and are superior ballplayers. I say this because it is an observable fact. Besides, as Charlie Dressen said after Negroes began to star in baseball, "Nobody asks the color of the guy who has just helped him collect a World Series check."

Now, for contrast, consider the warmth with which the Negro ballplayer was welcomed into the American League. When I owned the Cleveland Indians, we signed Larry Doby, a Negro, in 1947. A year later, we won the pennant and World Series—and broke all attendance records—with Doby and Negro pitcher Satchel Paige.

What followed this artistic and financial triumph was not quite what might have been expected, however. The scurrying after Negro players in our league was restrained to a point which would have thrilled any card-carrying member of the White Citizens Council. The St. Louis Browns did sign two Negroes at the beginning of a long road trip, but they managed to release them before the club returned to St. Louis.

Meanwhile, in Cleveland, we signed Luke Easter, Minnie Minoso, Al Smith and Harry Simpson, all Negroes. Beyond that, however, the American League stayed lily-white.

The A.L.'s attitude was partly that the signing of Negroes in Cleveland was just another of Veeck's cheap tricks. It was also the result of a tone-setting Yankee policy: to prove they could keep on winning without resorting to the use of non-white players. This was all right for the Yanks (who have won 14 pennants in 17 seasons since Negroes entered the majors), but it was a course that other talent-hungry A.L. clubs couldn't afford to follow if they wanted to stay competitive.

The Yankees' efforts to avoid putting a Negro in their pinstripes was not without its moments of high humor. In those days, the first thing any major-league team that did not want a colored player had to do was to sign a couple of mediocre colored players for their minor-league organization and then point to their failure. Playing this game, the Yankees bought a young Puerto Rican, Vic Power, from an independent team in Canada and assigned him to their farm system. Yankee luck being what it is, Power turned out to be a far better player than anyone had suspected. So eventually, without ever bringing him to New York, they traded him to the Philadelphia Athletics and ducked a difficult situation.

Finally, in 1955, eight years after Jackie Robinson broke baseball's color line, the Yankees brought up Elston Howard. He was rated the Most Valuable Player in the American League last year—the first Negro to win the MVP Award in the A.L.'s history. Meanwhile, Sandy Koufax, the Most Valuable Player in the National League last year, was only the fourth white player to win the award in 15 years.

The statistic which points up the stagnation of the A.L. most of all, however, is that Larry Doby is still the only Negro ever to have led the league in either home runs or runs batted in—and he did both in 1954. And no Negro has ever won the A.L. batting title, while Negroes have won it seven times in the National League.

In other words, the American League has come too late to the market. The gap, far from closing, has widened. The best

One measure of a democracy's strength is the freedom of its citizens to speak out—to dissent from the popular view. Although the editors of The Post often disagree with the opinions expressed in Speaking Out, they dedicate the series to that freedom.*

They've Wrecked the A.L.

Negro prospects, having a choice of clubs, still go to the National League. And what is the result? Put it this way. If you took the Negro players from any National League team (excepting the Mets and Colts) and put them on any American League team (excepting again the new franchises), they would make that club either a pennant winner or a serious contender. That's how great a difference the Negro player has made.

At the same time the American League was blowing retreat on the Negro players, it blew its chance to establish a foothold on the West Coast. Once again, the fine hand of the New York Yankees was conspicuous.

The American League's opportunity came in the winter of 1954 when the Mack boys put the Philadelphia Athletics up for sale. I wanted to buy the franchise and move it to Los Angeles. Clint Murchison of the Texas Murchisons also wanted to buy the club and move it to Los Angeles.

Del Webb, the co-owner of the Yankees, runs his huge construction business from the Coast. In public he plumped hard to bring A.L. baseball to Los Angeles, but as soon as the A.L. meeting opened (and the doors closed) he assured his fellow owners (as he had been assuring Baseball Commissioner Ford Frick all along) that the West Coast wasn't ready for big-league baseball. What he really meant, I think, was that Del Webb wasn't ready. He had another plan.

Arnold Johnson, who happened to be a business partner of Webb and Topping, wanted to buy the Philadelphia franchise and move it to Kansas City where—by coincidence—the Yankees had a sick minor-league franchise, and more to the point, a decrepit ball park they were rather anxious to get rid of.

Johnson had an agreement with the city fathers that if he could get the franchise for Kansas City, they would buy the ball park and then let him rebuild it to major-league specifications with a contractor of his own choice. By another of those startling coincidences, the contractor of his choice turned out to be none other than Del Webb.

In my book, what Del Webb had in mind was to sell the Kansas City ball park to the city fathers, get the contract from Johnson to rebuild it, let the Athletics remain in Kansas City for a few years as a sort of Yankee farm, then buy the club from Johnson and move it to Los Angeles. Once in Los Angeles, Webb probably hoped he might persuade the city to build a municipal stadium—and, with a little bit of luck, he would get the contract to construct it.

Now, if this was Webb's plan, it was a brilliant one for comforting his sunset years but it wasn't good for the A.L. In any event, Johnson purchased the A's from the Macks and moved the franchise to Kansas City. During the five years he operated the A's there, the team was, in effect, a Yankee farm club run by old Yankee farmhand, Parke Carroll.

Before Webb could carry out the next step, Walter O'Malley moved out of Brooklyn to Los Angeles and persuaded Horace Stoneham to bring his New York Giants out to San Francisco.

The failure of the American League to get a team established on the Coast at this time caused damage that has never been repaired. In the expansion of both leagues five years later, the National League moved back into New York under more advantageous terms than the old Giants and Dodgers had enjoyed, and found itself sitting very firmly in all the key cities. Even with the marginal ballplayers who were foisted off on the Mets, the New York franchise was a prospective financial success because of the fans who would turn out whenever their old heroes from the Giants and Dodgers came to town.

In the same expansion package that brought the N.L. back into New York, the American League was to move into Los Angeles. There was one slight difference. Where the Mets were assured of success, the Angels were assured of disaster. For at the last minute, Commissioner Ford Frick informed us that the American League could only come to Los Angeles with Walter O'Malley's approval, which meant on O'Malley's terms, as O'Malley's tenants in the new Dodger ball park in Chavez Ravine. The lucky owners of the new franchise not only had to pay O'Malley a lump sum to indemnify him for something or other, they had to play in his ball park and pay him rent. O'Malley even runs the Angels' concessions for them. In other words, the American League loses money by having a team in Los Angeles, and the National League (i.e., O'Malley) makes money.

O'Malley calls the tune

Walter O'Malley, it should be evident by now, runs his league just as completely as the Yankees run theirs. Under his guidance, the National League is run on the assumption that each of the owners knows his own problems and should be permitted to find his own solutions.

Last year, for instance, the N.L. was perfectly willing to let the new Milwaukee owners move their franchise to Atlanta, even though they had been operating in Milwaukee for only a year. This year, when Charles O. Finley wanted to move to Atlanta, the American League held meetings and sent telegrams and consulted all kinds of attorneys. And Finley remained in Kansas City.

Atlanta, with its new stadium, is easily the most attractive city for a new franchise. Since the American League has no shortage of weak franchises, one would assume that the American League has already staked out the territory. It hasn't. While the American League is holding its debates and casting its recriminations and consulting its attorneys, a National League franchise will pick itself up and quietly move in. The logical club to make the move is still Milwaukee. I have a hunch, though, that it is going to be a real long shot—Pittsburgh. The Pirates will probably move before another season starts, and the National League, which already has a franchise at Houston, will then solidify its position in the South just as it has now solidified its position on the West Coast.

This year, with the Yankee dynasty clearly in its twilight, the American League could have its best pennant race in years. And, with any luck at all, nine out of the 10 clubs could draw fewer customers than in 1963. Winning the American League pennant this season is going to be like winning the checkers championship at a chess club. Nobody really seems to care. That's because there is another—better—game in town It's called National League baseball.

Bill Veeck

All year long it has seemed that practically every time John Pennel gets his hands on a fiber glass vaulting pole the existing world's record—usually his own—is bested. He did it six times. At the Gold Coast A.A.U. meet in Miami, the 23-year-old senior of Northeast Louisiana State College was shooting at something more impressive than the world record of 16 feet 10¼ inches that he had set only two weeks before. He wanted to soar over a crossbar perched at the never-before-conquered altitude of 17 feet.

A Pole Bends—

The sun had slipped behind a cooling cloud and there was no wind at all when Pennel made his approach to the pit. His pole bent at a right angle, then snapped straight, and you could almost hear it go "boing!" Up went Pennel . . . up . . . up . . . and over. An instant later he had made his re-entry and lay laughing on a pile of sawdust. High above him the crossbar lay undisturbed at 17 feet and three quarters of an inch. With awe and astonishment onlookers swore he had cleared it with inches to spare.

the Great Pennel Breaks 17-foot Barrier

A PRIZE FOR A ZULU CHIEF

The graying freedom fighter, seated on the porch with his grandson, is Albert John Luthuli, a man of massive dignity, a former Zulu chief and now co-winner (with Dag Hammarskjöld) of the Nobel Peace Prize. Chief Luthuli won the prize the hard way. In 1935 he quit a career as a teacher in a missionary college in South Africa to take over as chief of his impoverished tribe. In 1952 he was forced to quit that job when he defied the white government's apartheid policy. Elected head of the militant but nonviolent African National Congress, he was arrested for treason in 1956, acquitted, then in 1959 banished to his home district.

Today Luthuli is South Africa's leading black statesman, although his insistence on moderation is scorned by black extremists. The South African government, furious at the slap which the award embodied, held back on permitting Luthuli to go to Oslo to receive his $43,300 prize. This did not matter to the 62-year-old chief. "God," he mused, "has answered the call."

CONTINUED

Advertisement

Meet Mrs. W. C. Kiefer of White Plains, N.Y.—housewife, mother and top-flight salesman. As a part-time representative in her community for LIFE Circulation Co., Mrs. Kiefer has discovered a pleasant way to earn extra income. She provides friends and neighbors with a complete magazine subscription service—for LIFE, TIME, FORTUNE, SPORTS ILLUSTRATED and other fine magazines. She is in business for herself, working when she wants to work, at her own pace and in her own home. Couldn't you, too, use extra income—to finance a vacation, buy new clothes or support a favorite community project? There's an easy way to earn it: join the thousands of men and women who make excellent part-time or even full-time income as local representatives for LIFE Circulation Co. No cash outlay on your part is required. You need only a sincere interest in making extra money and the willingness to devote at least one hour a day to earning it. We provide everything else: free professional supplies, training booklets and special sales material you can mail to prospective customers. No door-to-door selling is involved. For further information (and without obligation), send your name and address today to Thomas R. Hopkins Jr., Manager of Local Representatives, LIFE Circulation Co., 115 East Ohio Street, Chicago 11, Illinois.

Woman At Work

Smiling at the good news, Luthuli said, "The award is not just an honor to me but to all freedom-loving South Africans."

A busy chieftain and man of God

When he took over as tribal chief, Luthuli taught his tribesmen how to improve their sugar-cane fields, raised and educated his seven children and entered national politics. But he remained active in the Bantu Congregational Church founded by the American Mission Board (he still speaks English with an American accent). In 1937 he represented the Christian church in South Africa at a world conference in India. Since his home-exile started in 1959, visitors have reportedly been barred to him, including the Nobel Prize investigators and even Prime Minister Harold Macmillan. He has run his outlawed party as best he could by mail while managing his farm, reading and listening to the music he loves on a battery-run stereo record player.

Luthuli writes answers on a questionnaire submitted by reporters from South African radio which later bitterly assailed him.

CONTINUED

Chief Luthuli stands on his back stoep with his wife, Nokukanya, 57. He has a 25-acre farm and small sugar cane trucking business.

WILMA'S HOME TOWN WIN

The young Negro girl, who had gone to Rome and won fame, came back home to Clarksville, Tenn.—an old southern town some of whose residents remark gently "we've never had any race trouble here and no integration either." But for Wilma Rudolph the town was integrated for a day, at the biggest parade and the first integrated banquet in its history.

Wilma had won three gold medals at the Olympics for her running. She had also won praise for her good looks and charming ways. Clarksville had made plans to greet her, but she almost got back before the celebration was ready. Town dignitaries persuaded her to wait an extra day in Nashville, 50 miles away, and when she arrived the mayor, William Barksdale, was there to welcome her with a bouquet, and the streets were draped in bunting. Parachutists at nearby Ft. Campbell, Ky. put on a special drop for her and in the evening 1,100 of Wilma's friends and admirers crowded into the armory to hear her eulogized. With tears in his eyes, County Judge William Hudson said, "If I can overcome my emotions, I'll make you a little speech. Wilma has competed with the world and brought home three gold medals. If you want to get good music out of a piano you have to play both white and black keys."

← WAITING WITH WILMA'S BOUQUET, MAYOR BARKSDALE TELLS POLICE TO CLEAR ROAD

ON PARADE, she rides in a convertible down a Clarksville street. The soldiers following behind her car are from the famous 101st Airborne Division. At the left is the color guard from Ft. Campbell.

SMILING CHARM that captivated Rome lights up Wilma's face as she holds mayor's bouquet. City officials talked about giving her a car or television but feared that it would jeopardize her amateur status.

CONTINUED

another Mayflower customer reports:

"On-time loading and delivery!"

"We couldn't ask for better service than we received on our move from Philadelphia to Chicago. The timing of both departure and arrival was perfect, and so was the condition of our furniture!"

Promptness is a planned habit of Mayflower movers. Pick-up and delivery schedules are carefully arranged to save you delay and confusion. Their courteous efficiency smooths every phase of your move, from careful, safe packing and loading to the unpacking, setting-up, and placement of your possessions in your new home.

Modern Mayflower vans and equipment, with skilled, experienced Mayflower men, make your long-distance move safe and easy. Next move, let Mayflower do all the work. Just call your local Mayflower warehouse agent.

AERO MAYFLOWER TRANSIT COMPANY, INC., INDIANAPOLIS

America's Most Recommended Mover

Your Mayflower agent is a leading warehouseman in your city. He explains service, estimates costs, makes all arrangements. Find him under "Moving."

world-wide service

In all 50 states and Canada . . . overseas by ship or plane . . . our responsibility all the way!

new, higher standard of service

Only Mayflower men are "accredited"—qualified and kept up-to-date by special study, training, and tests.

exclusive, "packed with pride" service

Safeguards all your items, even the most fragile, with special Mayflower methods and materials.

HER PARENTS, Ed and Blanche Rudolph, await Wilma at parade's starting point. He is retired drygoods store worker, twice-married father of 19 children.

FOURTH-GRADE TEACHER Sammie Hodgkins embraces Wilma. Mrs. Hodgkins tried to shake hands, but Wilma said, "No you don't!" and gave her a hug.

CONTINUED

Relief can come twice as fast

Science proves Absorbine Jr. acts on tired, aching muscles to reduce fatigue itself— to bring relief twice as fast

Now science proves what millions of Absorbine Jr. users have always known—tired, aching muscles get relief with Absorbine Jr. Tests prove muscles can recover twice as fast as when "nature takes its course."

Medical experts measuring muscle power with the Electromyograph have proved Absorbine Jr. can bring muscles back twice as fast as nature can.

SCIENTISTS PROVE the speed with which Absorbine Jr. starts treating the cause of sore, aching muscles. Absorbine Jr. actually dilates the peripheral blood vessel walls. It speeds blood flow at the point of pain and so helps muscles get back to normal faster.

Any time you overwork or overplay and your muscles become stiff and sore, use Absorbine Jr. and see how much faster you feel better. Clean, refreshing Absorbine Jr. can help your muscles get back to normal twice as fast.

NEW PRES-O-MATIC APPLICATOR

No Spill • No Drip

ANTISEPTIC
FUNGICIDAL LINIMENT

Absorbine Jr.

NEW LOCAL ADMIRERS

AUTOGRAPHS FOR WHITE FANS are signed by Wilma at parade's end. This week she returned to Tennessee State where she is a junior in education.

RECEIVING COMPLIMENTS, Wilma sits at banquet in her honor as Mayor Barksdale, Brigadier General and Mrs. Charles Timmes gather around her.

LISTENING TO PRAISE, Wilma looks out over audience as Judge Hudson says, "You had great receptions in New York, Detroit . . . but this is home."

THE MEANING OF HARLEM

by Peter Abrahams

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ARNOLD NEWMAN

• We walked slowly up the sloping land. About us lights twinkled and cabs flashed by along the broad avenue. But I felt quiet and tranquil for all the rush and bustle of New York. It was early spring but still quite chilly, and a keen biting wind reached at us through our heavy clothing. I felt it sharply. It was going to take more than a few weeks to get me adjusted to cold climates; a few years in Jamaica's tropical warmth had thinned my blood utterly. But then, I am a child of the sun; my life began in Africa in the world of the tropical sun, and all the years I have spent in cold climates have not been enough to undo the sun lust in me. Forty-five degrees, a few weeks out of tropical Jamaica, was terribly cold to me.

My companion fared much better against the cold. To her the tropical sun was an ancestral memory three centuries removed, something one experienced on vacation or during a New York heat wave.

She looked at me as we passed a street lamp. My face must have mirrored my discomfort.

"Cold?" she murmured with a touch of concern in her voice.

I grunted in the way men do when trying to show a woman that they are tough and that discomfort does not matter; but I was comforted by the concern in her voice. It meant I hoped we could go back to the old friendly footing which had disappeared when I had told her about my wife and children over dinner.

I had met her one evening four days earlier, on Fifth Avenue in downtown New York. She was standing at a bus stop; small, very dark—almost black—with big brown eyes in a round face.

"Excuse me; could you please tell me which bus would take me to Harlem?"

She pulled back a little, suspiciously. Then my outlandish accent had penetrated. She had relaxed.

"You're a foreigner ——"

I decided to trade on my foreignness and pretended a greater ignorance than I possessed. It worked. She was going to Harlem herself and I could travel with her. And if I told her exactly where I wanted to get she would direct me. "I live in Harlem," she said, smiling; "I know it well."

"Just Harlem," I said. "I want to get to know it. I want to get lost in it. I want to get the feel of it."

"You will have to live there," she said; then, after a pause, "for a long time."

Continued on Page 76

MRS. BESSIE ALLISON BUCHANAN, first Negro woman to serve in New York's State Legislature, poses on Lenox Avenue near 112th Street, where a modern housing project gives evidence of the New Harlem. The remarkable Mrs. Buchanan, much honored for her civic good works, looks back on yet another career; she spent fifteen years, until 1929, acting in drama, musical comedy and D. W. Griffith silent films.

LANGSTON HUGHES, world-famous poet, is pictured in Mount Morris Park, with Harlem's segment of Fifth Avenue stretching southward behind him. Although born in Missouri, Mr. Hughes has lived in Harlem for many years; his affection for the district has been called a long and beautiful love affair. From his rise as a leader of the "Negro Renaissance" in poetry to his current tales of the shrewdly naïve Jesse B. Simple, all his works evoke life in Harlem and the Negro experience in America.

Continued from Page 74

She grew curious about me, and some of her suspicion returned. Just then the bus pulled up. After we had settled ourselves she turned curious brown eyes on me.

"I'm an African," I said and told her my name.

That rang a bell of some kind but she remained silent until we got off the bus at 125th Street.

"You're going to write about Harlem; about us."

She sounded coldly impersonal, almost hostile. I sensed some strong emotion at work and waited for more. Almost automatically we started walking along 125th Street. About us were the dark faces of the citizens of Harlem. Here we were a part of the background, not distinctive as we had been on downtown Fifth Avenue. The air, the mood, the atmosphere was different from downtown New York. Almost, this was a completely different place, not a part of New York City.

The long silence between us dragged on, with me waiting for an outburst that did not come. She seemed preoccupied with her own thoughts, hardly aware of me beside her. We crossed the wide avenue and I steered her into the bar of Harlem's Hotel Theresa.

With an odd mixture of defensive aggressiveness, she voiced her strong emotion over a drink. Beneath the half-angry, half-protesting flow of words lay an anxiety not to be misunderstood; an anxiety for me not to feel that the attack was personal. I tried to reassure her on the point.

"I—many of us—do not like some of your writings on Africa."

"Why?"

She looked into my eyes. Her expression said: "Are you really as naïve as all that?"

Then she explained, with obvious self-control. White folk tend to fasten on to every instance of squalor I had reported finding in Africa: the smells and the open drains. This reinforced the stereotype they had built up in their minds of how blacks lived. Why had I not written about the finer things: the schools, colleges, hospitals? Even if what I had written were true, didn't I know how it would be twisted and used against the Africans? That's what they did with the Negro in America.

She went on in that vein, explaining and justifying her stand; justifying the view that we ought to edit truth in our own interests because the white folk around us edited truth in their interests.

It suddenly hit me then with the sharp clarity of lightning that the American Negro must live in a semi-permanent state of psychological embattlement with the white world around him. I reflected that a white young female New Yorker would not carry on this kind of conversation with a white man from Europe whom she had met at a bus stop on Fifth Avenue. And it seemed to me that this was the measure of the gulf in experience between the black and the white New Yorker.

As though reading my thoughts, she stopped talking abruptly, smiled self-consciously and got up to go.

"I am still going to write about Harlem," I said, "so you had better help to educate me."

We met the following evening and again the evening after that. We wandered about the streets of Harlem; we went into drugstores and bars; into fancy restaurants and cheap little places; and we talked about Harlem and the Negro and freedom in America and Africa; and I rediscovered my Harlem bearings. My previous visit had been four years earlier.

Now at last we reached the top of the sloping land, the crest of Harlem's Sugar Hill. We turned and looked down, bracing ourselves against the wind. Below us, a sea of twinkling lights—the Black Metropolis, Black Manhattan, Nigger Heaven, the Greatest Negro City on Earth, the Capital of the Negro World, call it what you will—sloped away gently. It looked soft and kindly from where we stood. The darkness and fairy-tale lights hid its scars and blemishes. Harlem's physical location is one of the most desirable in Manhattan. It is within easy reach of most things in New York, almost at the center of the city's elaborate network of public transport, and the land on which it is situated is attractively varied and raised. It covers a triangular area of roughly six square miles. According to my guidebook, Harlem is that part of Manhattan Island from East 96th Street and West 110th Street on the south to West 155th Street on the north: from the East and Harlem Rivers on the east to Morningside and St. Nicholas Avenues on the west. Estimates of its population vary from 300,000 to more than 500,000.

Continued on Page 78

DR. AUBRE de L. MAYNARD was appointed to the House Staff of Harlem Hospital in 1926, the first Negro appointment. He is now Director of Surgery there, an authority on thoracic surgery, and consultant surgeon at Misericordia Hospital in the Bronx and Columbus Hospital in Manhattan. Here in one of the laboratories he continues the surgical research which has been extensively reported in major scientific journals.

SUGAR RAY ROBINSON, boxing champion and businessman, in his Harlem office on Seventh Avenue; from here, under an enormous picture of his wife, the former dancer Edna Mae Holly, he directs a sizable empire of holdings in New York, Detroit, Cleveland and Chicago. The perfume-loving Sugar, who learned to use his fists when he moved to Harlem at twelve, used them later in the ring to hang up a resounding record: as a welterweight he retired undefeated; as a middleweight he won the title twice, retired, then came back to win it three more times.

SPORTS
ILLUSTRATED

Continued from Page 76

The vast majority of Harlem's population is of course Negro, but there is an Italian Harlem as well as a growing Spanish Harlem with a steady flow of immigrants from Puerto Rico.

My companion touched my arm and pointed: "Four-O-Nine is over there," she said. This "409"—there was never any need to add "Edgecombe Avenue"—had once been the stylish center, the very heart of Sugar Hill. In the great and glorious days of the Negro Renaissance, when the millennium seemed just around the corner, Sugar Hill had been the home of the black élite, the Park Avenue of Negro America. And the apartment block known simply as 409 had once had such distinguished tenants as W. E. B. DuBois, Walter White, Thurgood Marshall, as well as a host of well-known writers and artists. There had been no question about your social and economic status if you could say—and you generally tossed it off casually—"I live at 409."

Today 409 is a legendary reminder of those grand days. There is still an air of grandeur about Sugar Hill, but it is run down; the grandeur of something that "has been." The majority of today's Sugar Hill dwellers take in lodgers. Those who can afford to pay the high rents without taking in lodgers have moved out to suburban New York. The very modern cocktail lounges, eating places and bars have run to seed or been turned into small shops. And the present-day citizens of Sugar Hill do not send their sons and daughters to the best universities in America or abroad.

Today the residential citadel of Negro financial and cultural success is Columbia University's Morningside Gardens Co-operative. But whereas the old élite of Sugar Hill were exclusively Negro, the new élite of Morningside live cheek by jowl with whites. The tenants of the Morningside Co-operative are an integrated mixing of Negro and white: 30 per cent are Negro, 70 per cent white. And there is a new Sugar Hill in the making on Riverside Drive.

I said to my companion: "It took a lot of sugar to move up to the Hill in those days, didn't it, honey?"

She was startled and amused by my attempt to speak like an American, but she responded: "It sure did, honey child, it sure did." As we walked down the hill, away from the vanished glory that was Sugar Hill, I thought of this girl beside me. I wondered how representative she was. How much of her feelings and opinions reflected group feeling in Harlem? How pervasive the "Nationalism" she had expressed so forcefully? How universal the sense of embattlement, of constant consciousness of the "enemy?"

We paused on the corner of Lenox and 125th. I suggested a parting drink. She did not feel like one this evening: she had a lot to do at home. Would we meet the following evening? No; she had another date. What about the evening after? No, that was out too.

I realized this was the moment of parting, I knew why, and there was no way of apologizing without embarrassing. I watched her walk away from me, small and graceful, a slightly lilting swing to her walk, like soundless music. And suddenly she seemed very lonely, very alone, as one can be in big cities. It might have been about her that Langston Hughes wrote:

Lovely, dark, and lonely one,
Bare your bosom to the sun,
Do not be afraid of light
You who are a child of night.

At one point she and I discussed the problems faced by sensitive educated Negro girls in finding mates. The tradition among American Negroes, she said, had always been that the girls had the better opportunities for education. When parents could put only one of two children through high school or college, and these were of different sexes, the choice almost invariably was the girl. Thus educated girls outnumbered educated young men. For the educated man the situation was ideal. He had a wide range from which to choose a mate. For the woman it was the opposite. Her choice was limited, competition fierce. For the sensitive this could be a situation of painful frustration.

I told her that the position was the exact opposite in Africa. There are pitifully few educated African women. The educated African male's range of choice is even more restricted than that of the American Negro woman. In almost every case, the educated African's wife is no more than a woman who cooks and cleans for him and breeds his children. I suggested, half in jest, that it would solve this problem if the

Continued on Page 80

THURGOOD MARSHALL, the country's leading lawyer in Negro and civil-rights cases, spearheaded the legal fight which produced school desegregation, and is responsible for many other constitutional precedents. Versatile, outgoing, a great storyteller, Mr. Marshall is as popular in Harlem for his warmth as for his professional achievements. To relax from hard work and much travel, he turns to his hobby—cooking.

THE REV. ADAM CLAYTON POWELL, JR., the most powerful figure in Harlem, at his lectern in the Abyssinian Baptist Church of Harlem; from here he guides the largest Negro church in the world and the largest Protestant congregation in the country. A political leader as well, the Reverend Powell has been a United States Congressman for fifteen years, during which he has often been the central figure in crackling controversies. His parishioner-constituents, for whom he can do no wrong, admire him also for his elegance in clothing, cars and homes.

Continued from Page 78
surplus educated Negro women of marriageable age were shipped to Africa. She treated the suggestion with the utmost seriousness. She and some of her women friends, she said, had discussed this selfsame idea and found it the ideal solution, and it had the added attraction of fitting in with their "Nationalism."

At last she swung around a corner, out of sight. I stood watching, hoping she would look back just once so that we could have a final farewell. But she was made of the stern stuff of the practical, hardheaded American child of our time.

The sharp wind that had chilled me on Sugar Hill seemed to have died down, or else it did not reach this low-lying section of Harlem. I felt more comfortable, less anxious to hurry to my overheated hotel room. I began to wander slowly down in the direction of 7th Avenue.

This avenue and 125th Street are the commercial and social centers of the street life of Harlem; 125th and the corners off it constitute the main shopping area. But just as very few Negroes in Harlem own the homes in which they live, so very few of Harlem's stores are owned by Negroes. Only some 20 per cent of the merchants and store managers are Negroes. This has in the past led to the injecting of racial overtones into essentially economic problems.

In the main Negroes tend to own small businesses: barbershops, beauty parlors, the smaller eating places. Whites own the big grocery stores, meat markets, bakeries, coal-and-ice companies, the big restaurants, clothing, department and furniture stores. One field in which Negro businessmen are extremely successful is the funeral-parlor home. The Negro spends more than the national average of $600 to bury his dead. The result is that undertakers are among the wealthiest men in the community. I found this preoccupation with giving the dead the right kind of send-off strikingly African in its psychological undertones. In tribal Africa the spirit of the dead is, if anything, treated with more thought and consideration than was the person while living. The body is well decked out. In some tribes the best in food and drink is buried with the body, as well as gifts to deliver on the other side in the spirit world. Then there is the ceremonial of drinking and singing, sometimes for nine or even twelve nights, to keep the spirit company on its dark journey. Burial is not so elaborate as all that with the New World Negro—but certainly the memory of old, forgotten ways is suggested; changed by time and a new situation.

Seventh Avenue is the broadest of the avenues in Harlem; one of the few tree-lined thoroughfares in that area of Manhattan. It is the avenue on which I saw more young lovers strolling than on any other. They were about me now, some holding hands. And I found it refreshing when I passed one particular couple—both teen-agers—and the girl self-consciously disengaged her hand when she saw me looking at them.

I paused at a street corner to listen to a Nationalist haranguing a small crowd for their lack of Nationalism and race pride. Earlier that same day, about eleven in the morning, I had met the principal "theoretician" of Harlem's Nationalist movement at the Frederick Douglass bookshop on 125th Street. It is a small, narrow shop jammed with literature on the Negro, and I was looking through some old historical books when he walked in. His name is J. A. Rogers. He is very tall—well over six feet—and ramrod straight. He is extremely fair, fairer than many a genuine white Caucasian (how silly can the language of race and color get?). There is something militaristic, solid and very British about him. He is hardly known outside Negro circles, yet is the most widely read pamphleteer in Negro America. Most of the ideas shouted by black speakers from soapboxes at street corners are culled from the writings of J. A. Rogers.

It was close on midnight and the streets were alive. I had been warned, mainly by white friends, to watch out for muggers. But Harlem seemed to me much safer, much more peaceful than the jungle of my native Johannesburg after dark.

Here and there I passed groups of men talking freely, loudly. They were relaxed, assured, as people are within the protection of home ground. Courting couples sauntered up and down, window-shopping. There were even a few children abroad at this late hour. And the only people who seemed out of place were the white policemen on their beat. Here, on the dark streets of Harlem, they were the outsiders.

Continued on Page 136

NORMAN LEWIS is a Harlem painter whose sensitive, mood-filled canvases have won steadily increasing national and international attention. Now fifty, Mr. Lewis began painting in the 1930's, later taught at the Harlem Art Center, and after numerous one-man shows he won the Popularity Prize at the Carnegie International Exhibition in 1955. More recently his work has been shown at the Venice Bienniale.

WILLIE "THE LION" SMITH, the master of lacy, lyrical, intense, barrelhouse jazz piano, makes himself at home at Ed Smalls' Paradise, one of the few surviving night clubs from the great days of Harlem jazz. Willie the Lion earned his nickname as an artilleryman during World War I and has sustained it since as an endlessly inventive jazz performer and composer. His personality is as forceful as his art: the cigar and the derby are symbols well in keeping with the Lion's native exuberance.

BURSTING TO FINISH OF 100-METER EVENT, WILMA STRAINS FOR TAPE. CRIPPLED BY DISEASE IN CHILDHOOD, SHE WAS UNABLE TO WALK UNTIL SHE WAS 8

OLYMPIAN QUINTESSENCE

A girl's triple win, a caper in the Colosseum, a Russian victory

The quintessence of Olympian effort was expressed in the lissome, straining figure of this 20-year-old American girl as she sprinted explosively across the finish line. Wilma Rudolph (above) of Clarksville, Tenn., who had already won the crowd with her high-stepping sparkle and easygoing air, now wowed everyone by her performance. She won the 100-meter dash in 11 seconds flat, just 8/10ths of a second slower than the men's time. She broke the Olympic record for the 200-meter dash in a qualifying heat, then, in the final, she breezed home four yards in front. For an encore she anchored the winning U.S. 400-meter relay team. This made her the first U.S. women's track star to win three gold medals since Babe Didrikson's 1932 victories.

Wilma's three wins were not enough to give the U.S. the unofficial team victory. To no one's surprise the hardy Russians emerged from the games with a commanding lead in both medals won and unofficial points scored (p. 118). They had 43 gold medals to the Americans' 34. But the final U.S. score was high enough to permit some moments of relaxation by Olympians like Don Bragg, men's pole-vault winner, who realized (next page) his ambition to play the role of his childhood hero.

CONTINUED

DWARFING A CELTIC, Wilt Chamberlain rises high over Boston's Ramsey while trying for basket.

THE LEAP THAT NO ONE CAN STOP

Legs flying, arms flailing, Wilt Chamberlain finally descended on the National Basketball Association. The pros had been waiting for him since they first got wind of the seven-foot giant at Philadelphia's Overbrook High School (LIFE, Feb. 21, 1955). Later at the University of Kansas (LIFE, Jan. 28, 1957) Chamberlain was acclaimed as the greatest college player ever. Still the pros had to see it to believe it. In his first games as center for the Philadelphia Warriors they hazed him unmercifully. They pushed him and held him and battered him with their elbows. But Chamberlain would not wilt. Keeping his temper, he began popping in baskets and gathering rebounds at a record rate for a rookie. Even against Boston's great defensive player, Bill Russell, he was able to score 30 points and make 28 rebounds. And wherever Wilt played around the league, the gate was up. A game that seemed to be growing stale because of all its big men looked suddenly very fresh indeed because of the biggest.

BATTLE OF THE GIANTS is waged between rookie seven-footer, Wilt Chamberlain (right), and old pro Bill Russell at 6 feet 9 inches. Here Chamberlain comes down hard after beating Russell to a rebound.

CONTINUED

The happiest scotch for the Holidays

MELLOW, LIGHT— JUST RIGHT FOR TONIGHT

MARTIN'S

V.V.O. SCOTCH

86.8 PROOF. IMPORTED BY McKESSON & ROBBINS, INC., NEW YORK, N. Y. ©McK. & R.,'59

PLAYING ROUGH in his own right, Wilt crashes down on two Boston players. "A man gives me an elbow," Wilt says, "I'll make sure he gets one back."

BEING OUTPLAYED underneath the basket, Wilt waves one of his huge hands over Bill Russell's head in a vain attempt to deflect a scoring shot.

CONTINUED

HT 9-7-40

BOOKS AND THINGS

By LEWIS GANNETT

FIVE years after the Emancipation Proclamation, up in the Berkshire hills, an American was born—as he himself later put it, "with a flood of Negro blood, a strain of French, a bit of Dutch, but, thank God, no 'Anglo-Saxon.'" In 1903 he published one of the great books of its period, "The Souls of Black Folk," which had a good deal of autobiography in its pages. In 1920 he published "Darkwater," also partly autobiographical. And this year W. E. Burghardt DuBois issues "Dusk at Dawn," a book to which he gives the curious subtitle, "An Essay Toward an Autobiography of a Race Concept."

Books

W. E. Burghardt DuBois

When Dr. DuBois was born, New England conceived itself as having helped put down a wicked rebellion for the purpose of freeing four million slaves. In the South black men newly emancipated, were voting freely; two groups of laborers—freed slaves and poor whites—dominated what had been a slaveholders' oligarchy. His Massachusetts neighbors regarded the new situation as an extraordinary experiment in democracy; Dr. DuBois still sees it so, and regards it as a tragedy that a film, "The Birth of a Nation," and a novel, "Gone With the Wind," have, even in the North, twisted the popular picture of an era of emancipation and enfranchisement into a legend of orgies of theft, rape and degradation.

W. E. Burghardt DuBois

He grew up with a consciousness of destiny, personal and racial. He was somewhat ashamed when another colored student, entering the Great Barrington High School, failed to excel the white students as he had easily done. When he entered a course in English composition at Harvard, he wrote proudly that "I believe, foolishly perhaps, but sincerely, that I have something to say to the world, and I have taken English 12 in order to say it well." Barrett Wendell, who was perhaps less 100 per cent Brahmin than Van Wyck Brooks pictures him in his "New England: Indian Summer," read that sentence to the class; and whether English 12 had anything to do with it or not, DuBois became a master of English style.

Blend of New England and Africa

At graduation, on a basis of scholarship, DuBois was chosen Harvard commencement orator. His theme was "Jefferson Davis as a Representative of Civilization." He pictured Davis as a strong man of the "Teutonic type," and suggested that the world would some day honor as highly the patient, trustful African type of civilization. The leading New York and regards it as a tragedy that a film, "The Birth of a Nation," and a novel, "Gone With the Wind," have, even in the North, twisted the popular picture of an era of emancipation and enfranchisement into a legend of orgies of theft, rape and degradation.

W. E. Burghardt DuBois

He grew up with a consciousness of destiny, personal and racial. He was somewhat ashamed when another colored student, entering the Great Barrington High School, failed to excel the white students as he had easily done. When he entered a course in English composition at Harvard, he wrote proudly that "I believe, foolishly perhaps, but sincerely, that I have something to say to the world, and I have taken English 12 in order to say it well." Barrett Wendell, who was perhaps less 100 per cent Brahmin than Van Wyck Brooks pictures him in his "New England: Indian Summer," read that sentence to the class; and whether English 12 had anything to do with it or not, DuBois became a master of English style.

Blend of New England and Africa

At graduation, on a basis of scholarship, DuBois was chosen Harvard commencement orator. His theme was "Jefferson Davis as a Representative of Civilization." He pictured Davis as a strong man of the "Teutonic type," and suggested that the world would some day honor as highly the patient, trustful African type of civilization. The leading New York weekly of the period—this was 1890—commented that the audience seemed ready to honor the type in the person of the orator.

"Patient" and "trustful," however, have never been the proper adjectives to describe Dr. DuBois. Among the intellectual leaders of his race he has always been unique in that he wrote primarily for his own people, rather than for a white audience. He believed in those days in the leadership of a Talented Tenth, and he set out to demonstrate such leadership in his own person. He challenged Booker T. Washington's passiveness as the South stripped the Negroes of the rights won after the Civil War. He was bitter. He was untactful. Whatever he has believed—and his new book is a study of his own changing concept of race—he has believed and stated with a passion and a power that are partly the heritage of the uncompromising New England of Garrison and Phillips, partly, perhaps, of sunlit, sensuous, laughing Africa.

Not American—Colored

"I was not an American," he says. "I was not a man; I was, by long education and continual compulsion and daily reminder, a colored man in a white world; and that white world often existed primarily, so far as I was concerned, to see with sleepless vigilance that I was kept within bounds. . . . How I traveled and where, what work I did, what income I received, where I ate, where I slept, with whom I talked, where I sought recreation, where I studied, what I wrote and what I could get published—all this depended primarily upon an overwhelming mass of my fellow citizens in the United States from whose society I was largely excluded."

The "Income-Bearing Value of Race Prejudice"

How that affected his teaching in Ohio, in Tennessee and in Georgia, his social studies, and his frank talk about the facts of racial intermixture in the South, seldom faced by either black or white, Dr. DuBois here tells. At first he thought of the situation as a peculiar product of American history. Gradually he grew into a conception of race as a determinant of world history, and then his conception of race began to merge into a still larger conception of mass and class. It was in Africa, whither President Coolidge sent him as Envoy Extraordinary to the Republic of Liberia, that DuBois came clearly to connect race and wealth. He came to believe that "the income-bearing value of race prejudice was the cause and not the result of theories of race inferiority; that particularly in the United States the income of the Cotton Kingdom based on black slavery caused the passionate belief in Negro inferiority and the determination to enforce it even by arms."

He had begun believing that race prejudice was primarily a matter of ignorance, and could be cured by the spread of knowledge; he came increasingly to understand that men are moved by deeper, subconscious springs. Statistical denial of the old legend that lynchings were revenge for the rape of white women did not stop lynching. Supreme Court decisions did not end segregation. Dr. DuBois lost his faith in the leadership of the Talented Tenth. He came to believe that "democracy" would remain a mockery until the colored peoples of Asia, Africa and the Americas were all freed from their prisons of poverty and ignorance.

From Frederick Douglass to Richard Wright

After a quarter of a century of preaching and editing in New York with "The Crisis," organ of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, as his pulpit, he broke with his erstwhile colleagues and, returning to Atlanta in the Deep South, accepted the realities of segregation for himself and his people, announcing a new doctrine, tha the only way to fight the color line was by color organization. It brough him into increasing contact and conflict with the Communists.

In this new philosophy Dr. DuBois is not always as clear as he w in his old crusading; it does not lend itself to ringing, poetic statemen of faith. Nor is he always fair to opponents in stating his disagreemen But his life bridges the history of the Negro in America from Frederic Douglass to Richard Wright, and this his life-story, with its painf honesties and reticences, its occasional wild flashes of African exultatior and its constant strain of genuinely philosophic insights, is an importar contribution to understanding of the major failure in America's evolutic into democracy.

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

ORDER NUMBER

This Clipping from

Raleigh N. C. News & Observer
January 30, 1946

RALEIGH, N. C., WEDNESDAY MORNING,

'Quit the South'

Harlem's Negro Congressman, Adam Clayton Powell, has written a book called "Marching Blacks," in which he closes with advising all Negroes to "Quit the South." In bitter words he calls to Southern Negroes: "Come North and let the bigots and race-baiters die alone among their own crumbling economic structure."

Fifty years ago, when Peg Leg Williams carried many Negroes from Southern farms to work on Western farms with the promise of big pay, laws were passed against such solicitation. Even so, many Negroes went. After a time many returned and others remained in their new homes. During World War I many Negroes went North where they were employed at high wages. When there came sweeping reduction in workers employed, the Negroes were the first to be fired. Many returned to the South where conditions were more to their liking but quite a number chose to be permanent residents in Northern States. They tended to live among their own race, and by Northern segregation most of them lived in Harlem, a like district in Chicago and Negro sections in other cities. Few of them went into the rural districts. During World War II the need for many workers and domestic labor attracted quite a number of Negroes to Northern cities where they received better wages. As a rule they lived with members of their race and in some places built their own churches and social centers. Will history repeat itself? When normal conditions return and there is reduction in employes, will many trek back to the South from which they went to get better paying jobs?

The Negro has the right to live where he pleases and most of them will reside where they are happiest and most prosperous. And nobody should say them "nay." The South hopes most of them will remain where they were born and where they are liked and where they will get better wages and better schools than in the old days where all—white and black alike—were poor. With more prosperity, the South is paying Negroes better wages, giving jobs?

The Negro has the right to live where he pleases and most of them will reside where they are happiest and most prosperous. And nobody should say them "nay." The South hopes most of them will remain where they were born and where they are liked and where they will get better wages and better schools than in the old days where all—white and black alike—were poor. With more prosperity, the South is paying Negroes better wages, giving their children better educational opportunities, many more will own their own homes and the land they till. They will live here among friends, and most of them will elect to stay and join with their white neighbors in making a more prosperous South. They may not fully agree with the Republican Senator who, after hearing Senator Hoey detail what North Carolina has done for the Negro, said to the Senator:

> I want to commend you on your fair, illuminating, and informative address. There is just one thing that disturbs me about it—I am just sorry that I can't be be a Negro and live in North Carolina.

Even Representative Powell, who tells Negroes to "Quit the South," said:

> I have always thought of North Carolina as not only the best State in the South but as one of the finest in the nation.

Many will elect to go North, as is their right. Nobody should hinder or help. In the North they will find no Utopia, doors will not swing open to them except in their own Harlem and Negro sections of the North. They will get lip service, but whether in the North or in the South their advancement will depend upon their own industry, character and usefulness. In 1945 Senator Ball of Minnesota asked the question and it came out that there had been more complaints of discrimination in employment in the North than there have been in the South.

Congressman Powell takes upon himself a great responsibility in urging the Negroes to "Quit the South." Southerners go out of their purview to say "Stay in the South." Competent and honest and industrious Negroes will do well no matter where they reside; those who expect to be lifted up on flowery beds of ease will be disappointed whether they live in New York or New Bern. Like all races everywhere, their future is largely in their own keeping. Work, correct habits, skill are the trinity that writes the future of the Negro as of all races.

In North Carolina, as Governor Hoey pointed out in a recent address in the Senate, the Negroes as a whole have better opportunities and better educational advantages than in any place they have ever lived. There is much to be desired and that both races will bring about in years of prosperity. It would be unwise for all Negroes to take the advice to "Quit the South" at the time when nobody can show there is a section where they will be happier or get along better. But nobody should be unwise enough to issue commands, "Stay in the South." It is equally unwise to give the slogan, "Quit the South." The Negro has come of age and may be depended on to chose his own place of abode. It would be hard for them and the South if they should en masse heed the slogan, "Quit the South." They

Lillian Smith on Georgia Mountain Writes of White Culture in South

Chattanooga Times 6/16/46

BY WARD MOREHOUSE
North American Newspaper Alliance.

CLAYTON, Ga., June 15 — Lillian Smith lives on a North Georgia mountain, and she also owns it. This mountain is called Old Screamer, a mile and a half from Clayton. She worked for seven years in the little rock house writing her best-selling novel, "Strange Fruit," and spent another year and a half making a play of it.

In the village of Clayton, county seat of Rabun County, this alert, articulate, 48-year-old southern woman is known as "Miss Lil"; she has the respect and the affection of the community. When the news got around that her play was to be done on Broadway her fellow Georgians responded. People of Clayton decided then and there to go into show business.

Miss Smith's favorite taxi driver put in $1,000, laying down cash on the line. Her colored cook invested $50 and her colored truck driver $500, giving her the money in $5 and $10 bills. Thirteen stockholders from Clayton (population about 900) included a doctor and a contractor. Friends in Atlanta invested eagerly. Approximately $43,000 of the $102,000 production cost of "Strange Fruit" was contributed by southerners, all of them persons believing in the author. And in such ways do plays of our time reach the Broadway stage.

"It was my first play for the professional theater," Miss Smith, novelist and editor, now tell you, "and after I got over the shock of the notices I went to work trying to save the play. I knew things weren't right before we opened in New York; I also knew we had a lot of actors and an expensive show to operate. There were 165 persons in the book; I cut that down to 35 in the play.

"Well, on the opening night I gave a party for my family and my southern friends. Then I went over to the Biltmore Hotel and read the morning notices. Some of the New York reviews were nice. But I could have spanked you critics and put you off to bed for the winter. 'Strange Fruit' has sold nearly 2,000,000 copies; it ran on Broadway for only eight weeks . . . but I'll be back."

"You know," smiled Miss Smith, "I'm not the reformer everybody insists I am. I think being called a crusader has hurt me the most. A few years ago we had few educated Negroes; now we have 70,000 and they are articulate. We must realize that if we educate Negroes we can't segregate them. I've had Negro friends from Atlanta here in my home.

"'Strange Fruit' was not a propaganda play; it wasn't a play about Negroes. It was a play about white culture and I was saying that our culture might collapse if it goes along dry-rotted as it has. I was trying in 'Strange Fruit' to probe into the lives of all of us. I got many letters on the play and about 4,000 on the book. They came from all sections and about 95 per cent of them were favorable. . . . The success of the book was very gratifying after all those years of patient work."

Miss Smith continued, quietly: "I come from a family of churchmen: I live in Georgia and love it and get along with the people. The South is full of decent, civilized, intelligent people who feel imprisoned by old customs, who don't know how to free themselves. I don't think the southern family has been really written about in fiction.

Loves to Live in South

"I enjoy my stays in New York and my travel—I'll be going to India within a few days—but I wouldn't dream of living anywhere except the South. I love the sweetness and graciousness of the people. In recent years I've been reading widely in fields of psychoanalysis and psychiatry and I've found all of that of great help in understanding the South and its people. . . . This place, this mountain, that little town, all that is home for me. We can't have a world in which everybody leaves home, can we?"

For nearly a decade Miss Smith has been co-publisher and co-editor with Paula Snelling, another deep-South woman, of the magazine, "South Today," temporarily suspended. Miss Smith is now working on a short novel and a non-fiction book, "Mr. White Man," which is about white culture.

"When I'm through with that, I'll be through with race subjects for awhile. I wrote one novel before 'Strange Fruit' but I won't let the publishers do anything with it."

"You will do another play—of course."

She smiled and said: "It was a lot of fun, even though the play didn't run very long. I enjoyed being in the theater and watching the play grow. The Communists began fighting me as soon as the book of 'Strange Fruit' came out and I always thought the stage hands were fighting we with the play. I thought they were openly antagonistic because of the subject matter. There was so much racket in changing the scenes the opening night I almost went out of my mind. We had some good actors, though."

Copy received Sept. 1946 9-1-46

Harry Harrison Kroll

Deep South

QUALITY.
By Cid Ricketts Sumner.
. . . 286 pp. . . . Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Company. . . . $2.75.

Reviewed by
FLORENCE HAXTON BULLOCK

MRS. CID RICKETTS SUMNER, who was born and bred in Mississippi, has written a very ingratiating propagandist novel designed to sell Americans, whatever the shades of their skins or their prejudices, some of the author's excellent ideas for improving the condition of the colored people—and incidentally, that of white people as well.

"Quality" takes accurate aim and makes a palpable hit without, believe it or not, wounding anybody at all. For so tender and genuine is Mrs. Sumner's love for the human race, be its skin black or white, that she is able to portray stupidities on both sides of the color line without undue the white folks' coach and thereafter, for a half dozen or so good years, into the white folks' lives. For Pinkey, while she was in the North, "passed." And for a time enjoyed to the full her freedom to be herself among other free young people. It was a love affair that she had to forego which drove Pinkey back South in the end. She brought back to the battered old Negro cabin and Aunt Dicey a broken and confused young heart, and the competence and training that had made her a registered nurse. The rest of Mrs. Sumner's story—and that is to say, the most of it—shows what kind of life a girl like Pinkey could make for herself and her people—against all the old handicaps and limitations in the deep South of 1946.

The framework of "Quality" is aptly contrived to illustrate all the points Mrs. Sumner wishes to stress. She dramatizes the folly of the radical Negro newspaper man with his passion for organization and publicity and his naive faith in the fantastic freedoms that will be his after a bit of struggle. And over against him she puts the quiet earnestness of the young Negro doctor whom Pinkey brings down from New York to help her ideas for improving the condition of the colored people—and incidentally, that of white people as well.

"Quality" takes accurate aim and makes a palpable hit without, believe it or not, wounding anybody at all. For so tender and genuine is Mrs. Sumner's love for the human race, be its skin black or white, that she is able to portray stupidities on both sides of the color line without undue venom or recrimination. As a result she has managed to produce a novel that Negroes could read with qualified pleasure and that even an old-fashioned mint-julep drinking Southern colonel will be able to read in short stretches without having his gorge rise to the point of obscuring his vision.

Yet "Quality" goes directly and unblushingly to the points its author wishes to make. Mrs. Sumner is honestly engaged in reporting the truth as she sees it about the Negro in the deep South vis-a-vis the white man who has been for generations his avowed best friend, but in fact his worst enemy.

"Quality" is a nice little parable set forth in the experiences of Pinkey, the promising young granddaughter of Aunt Dicey, an old colored woman whom the white folks regarded as "quite a character." They approved her loyalty to the old ideas—in her case to acid but honorable Miss Em in the big house—and gave little heed when Aunt Dicey saved enough money from bending over the washtub and the smoothing iron to send twelve-year-old Pinkey, all dressed up in blue gingham with white rickrack braid and her first straw hat, on the train to go North to school. Pinkey—who later called herself Patricia, then Pat, and finally Pinkey again, when unhappy circumstances forced her back South once more—had, it happened, a pretty, light skin. And she had also what her white Northern schoolmates were later to refer to as "class." And she was smart, besides. But at the moment of taking the train, Pinkey was merely a frightened little colored girl shrinking into her seat in a Jim Crow car.

It was the train conductor who looked at her white skin and told her, mistakenly, that she was in the wrong car. Pinkey said nothing, and followed him—into

Bachrach

Cid Ricketts Sumner

with her people, and the patient hopefulness and indomitability, in spite of disasters invoked against her by the white people, of Pinkey herself.

Moderation is Mrs. Sumner's watchword for the colored people, and she speaks it over and over again in "Quality." Somewhere between Aunt Dicey, who is willing to go along with the old ways, and Arch Naughton, who is looking for free streetcar rides and plenty of government relief, there is the middle dream which Mrs. Sumner, a bit sentimentally perhaps, believes can be made a reality in the Deep South before too long. The impatient may find her counsel of a slow and solid build-up of quality and character in the individual, in preference to mass action, a little puzzling in view of the shortage of decent schools and decent housing and chances at decent jobs that confront the Southern Negro in the here and now. And they may feel that patience for the Negro has long ceased to be a virtue.

As a novel "Quality" has not the spaciousness or richness of Lillian Smith's "Strange Fruit," and Mrs. Sumner shares Miss Smith's weakness in oversentimentalizing her colored heroine. Nor is "Quality" by any means so sturdily and realistically built up as Hodding Carter's fine "Winds of Destiny." But it has its own special merit. Mrs. Sumner is actually a protagonist neither for the white nor the colored race but, over and above all, for the human race itself, confronted with this pressing problem of adjustment and readjustment. And "Quality" is her tract designed to help us all, black and white, so far as in her lies, to find the way ahead.

'Quality' Treats Race Issue Fairly

By EMILY WOODWARD

TOO MUCH of the writing about race relations in the South is done with pens that drip prejudice, passion and ignorance.

Readers, weary of searching through fogs of emotionalism and error for clear paths to pursue in their reasoning on this subject, will find an oasis in Cid Rickett Sumner's book "Quality," just released by Bobbs-Merrill. Here, an author has chosen to work with a pen fed by the liquid light of truth. Mrs. Sumner's sustained loyalty to exactness gives the impression that she has just gotten around to developing a film out of a magic camera, left open in her mind while she lived in the South.

It is the face and the heart of Liberty Grove, Mississippi, that rise up in sharp relief out of the words moving through the pages of "Quality." It is the face and the heart of the South.

Blemishes Amid Loveliness

If moved by any sentimental impulse to touch out the blemishes on the face of her Mother State, Mrs. Sumner has proved unyielding. They are all there, sharply defined against the loveliness which is there also—furrows, deep-ploughed by evil passions; softly wrinkled paths, traced by gentle human emotions: moles, warts, pockmarks, crowded in between tiny laugh-lines. It is a face carrying the battle-ground marks of continuous psychological warfare.

All the elements of human passion are seen tugging at the heart of Liberty Grove, laid bare by Mrs. Sumner. We hear its gentle beating as it is fed by veins of kindness, when violence, hatred and injustice rush tidelike through its valves.

The characters in "Quality" are as true to type, as if stamped from originals. Miss Em, Dr. Joe, Mrs. Wooley, Aunt Dicey, Patsy, Jake, Rosalie, Arch, the lawyers, court attendants and judge, might have stepped out of any Southern town into the pages of "Quality." With them could have come the rambling old house and tangled garden on the hill, the magnolia trees, camellia bushes, the town's dark, ragged fringes with their dingy, staggering cabins, untidy crooked streets, twisted hungry-looking trees, sagging fences, dusky little denizens, running, hobbling or chained by disease to lumpy, cotton pallets in shadowy rooms.

The sociological complexities in Liberty Grove could have come out of a community in any region. The cruelty, generosity, callousness, egotism, bigotry, nobility, greed, gallantry, wisdom, ignorance, courage, hope, despair, class distinction and strife in each race and between races, follow a universal pattern.

Not Only in the South . . .

The author is not guilty of the common error of giving all the vices or all the virtues to any one individual or racial group: she has kneaded them into the fabric of one and all. Like nature, too, she has yielded to caprice in distributing "quality" in human character; tucking it beneath the sagging coat of a weary country doctor, the frayed bed-jacket of a proud white daughter of the Old South, the white uniform of another daughter, wearing the cream-skinned badge of dishonest heritage; and, taking time to choose something extra special to leave under a dusky old servant's shabby second-hand frock.

A claim to genius in the art of giving power to words is proved for Mrs. Sumner in "Quality." More important is the proof of her rich endowment in the talent to exhort without dull preachment. In addition to stirring readers to chair-edge with excitement and suspense, Mrs. Sumner stirs consciences into a realization that latent storms lurk in the clouds of slums allowed to settle in pockets and on the rims of towns and cities—not only in the South, but everywhere.

Journal Sept -?. 1946

N.Y. Herald Tribune
Weekly Book Review

In the South

MOONRISE.
By Theodore Strauss. . . .
216 pp. . . . New York: The Viking Press. . . . $2.50.

10/13/46

Reviewed by
WILLIAM ABRAHAMS

THE scene of this short psychological novel is a small town in the South. Its hero, a young man named Danny Hawkins, has grown up there always on the outside, socially insecure, obsessed and stigmatized by the memory of his murderer father. In a desperate attempt at self-assertion, Danny "takes on" the most offensive of his tormentors, Jerry Sykes, son of the local banker. But the brawl that follows serves only to remove Danny from the role of symbolic outsider to actual outlaw; in the passion of the moment he smashes in Sykes's skull and kills him. He must hide the body; he must behave as though nothing has happened; he is terrified, guilt-ridden, conscience-stricken. And to make everything more complicated, he falls in love. By ironic coincidence, the girl he chooses is Gilly Johnson, a school teacher who was to have married Jerry Sykes, and it is perhaps less irony and more coincidence that Gilly responds to Danny instantly and passionately. Theirs, of course, is one of those love affairs doomed before it begins, for it is only a matter of time until Danny realizes that he must surrender Gilly and his freedom, if he is ever to achieve the spiritual freedom that matters most.

Theodore Strauss

Even so brief a summary as this will indicate the dramatic values of "Moonrise," and it can be said that Mr. Strauss has not slighted them. He has handicapped himself, however, by a too scrupulous attempt to tell the story not merely from Danny's point of view but in his own terms. Something of the young man's inarticulateness communicates itself to the printed page; the many reflections on life and death, while quite consistent with Danny's intelligence, are regrettably commonplace: a monotone of surface thinking. Significantly enough, once Mr. Strauss allows himself, [illegible] his [illegible] elli- [illegible] behind the [illegible] reals himself as a writer [illegible] ied talent. The sections dealing with Billy Scripture, a deaf-mute idiot boy, are written with feeling and accuracy of observation.

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

ORDER NUMBER

This Clipping from

Atlanta, Ga. Journal
November 25, 1946

I 10

AUTHOR MEZERIK SPEAKING

Prosperity Held Key To Racial Problems

Prosperity is alleviating racial antagonism in the South, and race relations will continue to improve if the South can rid herself of widespread poverty, A. G. Mezerik, author of "The Revolt of the South and West," said here Monday.

A. G. MEZERIK

"Since I have spent most of my life in Toledo, Detroit and New York, I don't like to talk about race relations, because I know we haven't solved the problem in those cities," he said. "But I do know that economic and job competition is the basis of racial ill-will. Prosperity lessens this feeling."

Mr. Mezerik believes that the recent action of the North Carolina Baptist convention, urging a federal antilynching law and equal hospital, suffrage and educational opportunities for all races, is "the most significant development" in Southern race relations in years. He also noted that the Georgia Baptist convention held a joint session with Negro Baptists recently.

The author said no one has challenged the section of his new book which described Atlanta in these words: "Atlanta is the ultimate in joint political and social control by varied eastern owners working with special southern interests to control the city and the state." His information about Atlanta, he said, was obtained in interviews with approximately 50 local business men.

"I'm not against branch industries in the South," he explained, "but I believe that they aren't the basis for a sound economy. Your economy must be based on your own industries. You talk about your tenant farmers in the South, well you have tenant industries, too. The South needs more technical colleges, so you can train people to manage industries. Mr. Mezerik spoke to Georgia Tech students Monday morning.

Atl. Journal 11-25-46

AUTHOR MEZERIK SPEAKING

Prosperity Held Key To Racial Problems

Prosperity is alleviating racial antagonism in the South, and race relations will continue to improve if the South can rid herself of widespread poverty, A. G. Mezerik, author of "The Revolt of the South and West," said here Monday.

A. G. MEZERIK

"Since I have spent most of my life in Toledo, Detroit and New York, I don't like to talk about race relations, because I know we haven't solved the problem in those cities," he said. "But I do know that economic and job competition is the basis of racial ill-will. Prosperity lessens this feeling."

Mr. Mezerik believes that the recent action of the North Carolina Baptist convention, urging a federal antilynching law and equal hospital, suffrage and educational opportunities for all races, is "the most significant development" in Southern race relations in years. He also noted that the Georgia Baptist convention held a joint session with Negro Baptists recently.

The author said no one has challenged the section of his new book which described Atlanta in these words: "Atlanta is the ultimate in joint political and social control by varied eastern owners working with special southern interests to control the city and the state." His information about Atlanta, he said, was obtained in interviews with approximately 50 local business men.

"I'm not against branch industries in the South," he explained, "but I believe that they aren't the basis for a sound economy. Your economy must be based on your own industries. You talk about your tenant farmers in the South, well you have tenant industries, too. The South needs more technical colleges, so you can train people to manage industries. Mr. Mezerik spoke to Georgia Tech students Monday morning.

Book Reviews

by J. Saunders Redding

"A NEGRO'S FAITH IN AMERICA," by Spencer Logan 88 pages, Macmillan Co., Price $1.75.

Toward the end of the first autobiographical chapter of his book, "A Negro's Faith in America," Spencer Logan has this to say:

"I have given this brief statement of my background and experiences before entering the Army so that the reader may judge the point of view from which I write."

But the point of view is extremely dubious and equivocal, and as for the rest, one must conclude that there is nothing either in Mr. Logan's background or experience that qualifies him to write the kind of book "A Negro's Faith in America" turns out to be.

"Presumptuous, Condescending"

For the book is in no sense a personal testament, as the title implies. Instead, it attempts to speak for all colored Americans; and in so doing it is at least presumptuous. It is also condescending, captious, and pretentious, though I feel certain that the author intended it to be none of these things.

Mr. Logan, one feels, is a sober and sincere man. Now a man who is sincere can be forgiven much, but the kind of sincerity required in a book of the sort "A Negro's Faith in America" purports to be should stem not from individual frustration, but from an objective, coldly clinical knowledge.

This knowledge the author simply does not have. Somehow he has been led into inexcusable errors. He passes judgment on matters which he understands imperfectly.

Opinions Contrary to Fact

He utters opinions which are unsupported by fact, and, indeed, are sometimes quite contrary to fact; and he uses cliches which, whatever else they do, do not clarify meaning.

In a turgid resume of what colored people in America have tried to do to better their lot, Mr. Logan says:

"Certain Negro leaders possessing more zeal than realism have propounded impressive but impractical plans for their people. These plans failed . . . ." (because) "the proponents of all the plans overlooked this (the impulse of a civilization to protect its own chances of survival) when they glibly announced their purpose . . ." (The leaders) "were intent upon setting up concepts and institutions which were alien and even unfriendly to this civilization.

"Dr. DuBois through the Pan-African Congress wanted unity of Negro thought. Dr. Miller would have set up a central clearing house for Negro opinion which would in time have become autocratic in its operation. . . ."

"'Sheer Nonsense"

The central point in this statement (that W. E. B. DuBois and Kelly Miller were interested in setting up concepts alien and unfriendly to America) is sheer nonsense, as are such statements as these picked at random:

"It is generally recognized by Negroes that the lighter the color, the less stability of character and purpose.

"This senseless belligerancy (of Negro leaders) created the atmosphere for the recent rioting in New York City. . . . The rioting could not be explained directly in terms of hunger for food. It could be attributed, however, to the constant agitation carried on by Negro leaders for the letter of democracy."

Meaningless Statement

And what does this statement mean?: "America is a potential proving ground . . . of the theory that all men have within themselves a mental and spiritual unity."

But of course, if Spencer Logan had left out all the immature appraisals, all the carping, and all of the material that shows his woeful lack of historical and social fact, he would have had an essay of less than three thousand words — and an essay of less than three thousands words would not have made a book.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
March 2, 1955

Race Relations

Racial Integration Cited in South's Social Trends

By Bicknell Eubanks
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Dallas

Economic change in the South has been a dominant theme of the region in the past decade. What was once called the nation's number one economic problem has become now a major force in the continued boom in the United States.

Parallel with these material improvements which are changing the face of the South are sociological and political shifts which are altering the thinking of southerners and mark a continuing transition from passive to active efforts to attain a broader base of democracy. Dominant in this politico-sociological shift has been a change in the pattern of racial relations which, according to the biracial Southern Regional Council, has been developing with "phenomenal rapidity."

Postwar Tension Fades

"Nine years ago," the council recalls, "Negroes were for the first time casting their ballots in the erstwhile white primaries; there were no elected Negro officeholders in the South; the Ku Klux Klan showed formidable signs of reviving; lynching appeared to be on the increase amid postwar tensions; the armed forces were still segregated; white and Negro passengers were rigidly separated on interstate railway coaches and dining cars; no Negro students attended any southern state university, and inequalities in the dual school system were just beginning to be seriously challenged."

In a small, potent volume just published by the council from its Atlanta headquarters, the SRC dramatically details the "profound changes in these and other areas of public life" during the past 10 years. The council has reprinted selected articles from its monthly publication, New South, in which it has portrayed since January, 1946, the vivid as well as the often little-noticed shifts in public opinion which are developing a solid base of interracial understanding south of the Mason and Dixon's line.

"The 42 selections included afford an over-all view of the main trends of the last decade," the SRC emphasizes. It insists that the basic theme which emerges is inescapable: "That the South is moving—not always smoothly, but with seeming inevitability—toward an increasingly integrated society. The Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, against segregation in the public schools was simply the most far-reaching in a long chain of developments."

The council has designed this collection from its monthly bulletin to "show clearly that many of the gains in principle and in public policy have yet to be achieved in everyday practice. The attainment of a broader democracy is now particularly the task of local officials, the churches, civic and labor groups, civic clubs—in short of all individuals and citizen groups active in community life."

The collection of articles, entitled "Changing Patterns in the New South," is designed, according to the SRC, to help "in this ongoing effort."

"It was inspired by two considerations," the nonpartisan, interracial group emphasizes. "First, there were the interest and recognition that have been accorded New South in its nine years of publication by those who have wanted responsible facts and interpretation of the southern scene. Secondly, there was the evident need for a single publication of this kind as an aid to both study and action."

The collection of articles has been printed under several general topics, such as "The Ballot," "Law and Order," "A Voice in Policy," "Work and Color," "The Press," "The Right to Read," "Interstate Travel," "The Armed Forces," "Higher Education," and "The Public Schools."

It includes such dramatic and important documents as the historic Durham Statement by Negro southerners, which was issued originally in 1942 and reprinted in 1952, the SRC's own stirring call in November, 1952, for a "shift from paternalism to democracy," an editorial from the Atlanta Constitution, called "A South of Union and Freedom," in which Ralph McGill one of the nation's outstanding editors and winner of the 1953 Southwest Journalism Forum Award, expresses his "thoughts on Negro officeholders," the Hot Springs Statement of November, 1954, in which a group of Negro educators from southern states analyze the Supreme Court decision on school segregation and term it "another milestone in the nation's quest for a democratic way of life and in the Negro's long struggle to become a first-class citizen."

The council, while not hiding the debits, emphasizes the credits in the South's steady march toward solving a problem which all groups, while differing on methods of solution, agree is serious and must be worked out.

Check on Violence Cited

The theme of the SRC's program might be taken from an editorial of the Asheville, N.C., Citizen marking a report issued by Tuskegee Institute in January, 1953, that for the first time in its 70 years of keeping records of lynching a whole year, 1952, had passed without such an outbreak of lawless violence.

"Education, respect for the law, and most of all an awareness of the rights of the human person under the law—these things have prevailed," the Citizen noted. "The record of a year is a record to be viewed at length with pride just as in the unhappy past it was viewed at length with sorrow and humiliation.

"The South can lift up its head."

Chattanooga Daily Times

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., MONDAY, MARCH 7, 1955.

BODY WOULD DEFY SEGREGATIONISTS

Southern Regional Council Says Many in South Are Ready for Integration

By JOHN N. POPHAM
New York Times News Service.

ATLANTA, March 6—A group of race relations experts urged today that "responsible Southern voices repudiate fraudulent leadership on the school segregation issue."

Fourteen executive committee members of the Southern Regional Council declared that "there are thousands of Southerners, white and Negro, for whom the demagogues do not speak and whose voices have been little heard above the din of controversy."

"In the Deep South," they charged, "there is presently a concerted attempt by official leadership to stamp out independent thought and stifle all dissent with respect to school segregation.

"Consequently, it is imperative that responsible Southerners confirm the fact that vast numbers of us will not defy the United States Constitution, the teachings of our religion and the prevailing opinions of the free world."

First Assessment

The council, widely regarded as the South's most effective interracial organization, made its first assessment of area attitudes since the Supreme Court ruled last May 17 agains public school segregation statutes.

Successful school desegregation in 80 border state counties, including three major metropolitan areas, the committee members emphasized, currently demonstrates to the world that American democracy has the vigor and capacity to solve its thorny racial problems.

The entire country, the committee continued, owes "a heavy debt of gratitude to the many private citizens and public officials whose allegiance to the law of the land made this progress possible."

At the same time, the committee chided those Southern political leaders whose stratagems deny "Southerners of good will the opportunity to work similarly toward compliance with the Supreme Court decision."

No Blind Alley

The committee warned, however, that "the people of the region will reject those who would lead them down the blind alley of rebellion."

Illustrative of the stratagems designed to "hoodwink" the public, the committee members declared, are measures recently enacted in Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana.

"Most of these measures," the committee noted, "impose heavy penalties on any local authorities or school systems that might choose voluntarily to comply with the Supreme Court ruling.

"Ironically, the proponents of these measures are the same spokesmen who repeat over and over that most Negroes and virtually all white persons will defend segregation at any cost. Obviously, they don't believe their own words."

"Moreover, leading Southern authorities on constitutional law who have examined these circumventing statutes have agreed that they are dodges and will not stand in court."

In other parts of the South, the committee members added, there are some officials who pursue the policy of "wait and see" that might better be described as "look the other way."

For Local Planning

"Such an attitude," they continued, "promotes paralysis of public thought and thereby forfeits a valuable opportunity for advance discussion and planning to insure a smooth transition to integrated schools."

In summary, the committee members emphasized that intensive study of the South's racial problems has led the council to "strongly recommend local planning by citizens of the two races as the soundest means of preparing for compliance with the Supreme Court decision."

Those signing the statement were Marion A. Wright, Linville Falls, N.C., president of the council; Dr. George S. Mitchell, Atlanta, executive director of the council; Morris Abram, lawyer, Atlanta; Mrs. Cassandra M. Birnie, lawyer, Atlanta; Paul Christopher, labor union official, Knoxville, and Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atanta University.

Also, John A. Griffin, educator, Atlanta; the Rev. Harry V. Richardson, president of Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta; the very Rev. Maurice V. Shean, dean of the Catholic Oratory, Rock Hill, S.C.; Miss Josephine Wilkins, civic leader, Atlanta; Dr. Albert W. Dent, president of Dillard University, New Orleans; Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, professor emeritus, Virginia Union University; Carter Wesley, newspaper publisher, Houston, Tex., and Leonard Haas, lawyer, Atlanta.

The South and I

A Southern newspaper editor who exposed the "white Citizens' Councils" in LOOK tells what happened to him as a result—and how he has defied his detractors

By Hodding Carter

It happened on April Fools' Day. But it wasn't a joke to me or to the majority of the Mississippi House of Representatives who, by formal resolution, voted on April 1, 1955, that I had lied, slandered my state and betrayed the South in a LOOK Magazine article (March 22 issue) about the Citizens' Councils—the militant Southern white groups which have been organized to discourage school integration and Negro suffrage.

Perhaps in the history of state legislatures, other citizens have been made liars by legislation. But I doubt that any of them received the accolade under the same conditions as I did.

April 1 was the final day of a special legislative session at which our Mississippi lawmakers had been seeking feverishly, and finally with success, to find new money to equalize the dual school systems, as a means of avoiding racial integration. April 1 was also the opening day of the turkey-hunting season. With four friends, a cook and a guide, I was turkey hunting forty miles from my home town, Greenville, Miss. Our headquarters was the Mistuh Charley, my newspaper's cabin cruiser, and we were playing cards aboard her that afternoon after an unsuccessful opening day.

The game was interrupted by a low-flying plane that dropped a bundle near the wooded shoreline. I kept on playing cards but John Gibson, the Delta Democrat-Times business manager and my publishing associate, went out and found the bundle. He returned and handed me some sheets of paper. "You'd better read this," he said.

I did, and for the time being I lost interest in cards and turkeys. Joe Call, a cotton-duster pilot and friend, had dropped a press-association report of what the House of Representatives had done, together with a note from my wife. I read the note first:

"We've played the story on page one as second lead. Everybody's calling for your answer. When can we get it and what else shall we do? Love, Betty."

Then I read the wire service report. It was like being kicked in the stomach by 89 angry jackasses. That number of state legislators, with 19 opposed and 32 others not voting, had officially branded me a liar. During two hours of angry debate preceding the vote, I had been described in terms not often used by lawmakers. I was a Negro-lover and a scalawag, a lying newspaperman, a person who "as far as the white people of Mississippi are concerned, should have no rights." I had sold out the South for 50,000 pieces of silver. (Note to LOOK: You owe me money.)

The elderly Speaker of the House, a perpetual seceder and a backer of the Citizens' Councils, cast a vote for the resolution, gratuitously, although ordinarily he would not vote on any measure except to break a tie. I was defended by a few, notably the two young lawyer-legislators from Greenville and another young representative, Joel Blass of Stone County. Blass told how he also had felt the Councils' lash because he had opposed a Council-backed constitutional amendment making it possible to abandon the state's public-school system. The fact that these men are young is important to this story and to the future of Mississippi.

My hunting companions thought the whole thing was funny. I didn't, even though they assured me—and I agreed—that a Mississippi legislative majority was mentally and morally incapable of insulting anybody. I ducked below and started writing. I'm glad, I guess, that my fellow turkey-stalkers talked me into watering down the original version. [The watered-down version is reproduced on Page 77. Ed.]

I decided to wait until the next morning to telephone in the reply I had written. We turned on the radio and heard how I had been done in, and then went on playing cards.

But in the woods on the rest of the hunt I couldn't forget what had happened. I did a lot of thinking about my twenty-three years as editor and publisher of small newspapers, four years in Louisiana

continued

Liar By Legislation

By a vote of 89 to 19, the Mississippi House of Representatives has resoluted the editor of this newspaper into a liar because of an article I wrote about the Citizens' Councils for Look Magazine. If this charge were true it would make me well qualified to serve with that body. It is not true. So, to even things up, I herewith resolve by a vote of 1 to 0 that there are 89 liars in the State Legislature beginning with Speaker Sillers and working way on down to Rep. Eck Windham of Prentiss, a political loon whose name is fittingly made up of the words "wind" and "ham".

As for the article, I stand by it. This action by a majority of the House of Representatives only serves to add new proof to what I wrote. There is one editor of this newspaper. I vote only in Washington County. The Citizens' Councils claim 30,000 members who vote all over the state. That is explanation enough for the resolution.

I am grateful to the 19 legislators, and especially to Greenville's two representatives, who voted against the resolution. I am also appreciative of the sane comments of Rep. Joel Blass of Stone County who likewise has been a target of the dishonest and contemptible tactics used by the Citizens' Councils against anyone who differs with them or their methods.

I am hopeful that this fever, like the Ku Kluxism which rose from the same kind of infection will run its course before too long a time. Meanwhile, those 89 character mobbers can go to hell, collectively or singly, and wait there until I back down. They needn't plan on returning.

Hodding Carter

Carter's counterattack on the Mississippi legislators who voted him a liar appeared April 3, 1955, on the front page of The Delta Democrat-Times.

and the last nineteen in Mississippi. I had never looked on myself as a starry-eyed crusader or an unfriendly critic of my homeland. No book or editorial or article I had ever written, including the LOOK article, would so identify me. I do like to believe that we've tried on our paper to take seriously the idea of man's equality. But we've been generally orthodox newspaper people, my wife and I.

I have noted, however, that an editor is remembered longest for his unpleasant comments—and for comments made about him. Long ago in Louisiana that odious anti-Semite, Gerald L. K. Smith, said that I had been run out of Mississippi as a young newspaperman and would be run out of Louisiana. Every now and then, some politician will repeat that preposterous fantasy as gospel. When I won a Pulitzer prize for editorial writing in 1946, the late Theodore G. Bilbo, then running for re-election to the United States Senate, told his listeners that "no self-respecting Southern white man would accept a prize given by a bunch of nigger-loving, Yankeefied Communists for editorials advocating the mongrelization of the race."

When, ten years earlier, in 1936, ours had been the first Mississippi paper to print a picture showing a Negro in a favorable light—it was of Jesse Owens, the Olympic triple-winner—some of the readers who canceled their subscriptions said that our action was part of a Communist plot to end segregation.

When (and this again was unique in Mississippi) we began using the courtesy title "Mrs." before the names of Negro women in news stories, the tale spread that we would soon demand "social equality" for Negroes. And every time we have come out for anything that some of our special pleaders or Stoneagers haven't liked—from the Blue Cross nearly twenty years ago, to a good word for the United Nations—we have known we could expect the same emotional cacophony, and that the cumulative roaring would echo loudest during political campaigns. But never had we been ganged up on by a state

continued

If your car feels like this... it's time for MARFAK chassis lubrication

That "cushiony" feeling lasts longer with – MARFAK Lubrication

Drive right into summer—treat your car to Marfak lubrication! Marfak's extra tough. Sticks to chassis points, safeguards vital parts against wear and friction. Marfak won't jar out, squeeze out or wash out—assures 1,000 or more miles of pillowy-soft, cushiony driving. Get set for smooth motoring with longer lasting Marfak chassis lubrication today. See your Texaco Dealer—the best friend your car has ever had.

TEXACO DEALERS in all 48 states

TEXACO

THE TEXAS COMPANY

Texaco Products are also distributed in Canada and in Latin America

TUNE IN: TEXACO STAR THEATER starring JIMMY DURANTE or DONALD O'CONNOR, on TV Saturday nights, NBC.

New Formula Kills 'Roots' of Ringworm, Fungus

ATHLETE'S FOOT

AMAZING NEW TYPE FORMULA WITH SYNERGISTIC ACTION STOPS ITCHING SPREADING—Fast!

CLINICALLY-PROVEN, Healing
Effective. Non-Irritating, Safe For Children.

Wet feet pick up the fungus. It takes root.

Hydrotox kills 'roots' inside skin, stops spreading.

Unless you kill the 'roots' of Athlete's Foot it can come back again, and may do serious damage. The 'roots' grow under the skin like a plant and may be present before you see a crack between your toes or start to itch. They may be still spreading long after some all-purpose antiseptic has helped heal itching and cracks. Only new Hydrotox has Synergistic Action—kills deep-down 'roots'—safely—gently. (For daytime use, and to keep from catching Athlete's Foot again—use Hydrotox dry spray powder.)

Greaseless, stainless, odorless. Stops itching, burning—spreading—fast! Get Hydrotox today. Only 1.49 for large tube. For the Sake of Your Skin

COMMENDED BY THE PARENTS' MAGAZINE

hydrotox

Sold at Drugstores. Recommended by Doctors

Copyright 1955, Zotox Pharmacal Company, Inc., Stamford, Conn. Price Slightly Higher In Canada

ATHLETE'S FOOT CAN BE DANGEROUS

Today, one out of 3 has Athlete's Foot, Ringworm or other form of contagious fungus. Many don't even know it. Others believe themselves cured, while the fungus "roots" still grow like wildfire under their skin. Don't take chances on hidden Athlete's Foot flaring up again! Guard against catching this highly infectious fungus! Always keep your feet clean, dry and protected against fungus—with new Hydrotox Dry Spray Powder!

Stops scratching!

Sergeant's new
SKIP-FLEA SCRATCH Powder:

- Stops itching fungus, the most common cause of dog itch!
- Kills fleas, ticks and lice!
- Repels doggy odor!

49¢ and 79¢ at any drug or pet counter.

Sergeant's®
SKIP-FLEA SCRATCH Powder

FREE: Sergeant's Dog Book answers all questions on dog care and training. Get your copy today at any drug or pet counter or write: Sergeant's, Richmond 20, Va.

No surgery needed to reduce swelling of hemorrhoids at home!

In doctor's tests, amazing new Stainless Pazo instantly relieved piles' torture! Gave internal and external relief—without surgery! 6 medically-proved ingredients relieve pain, itching instantly! Reduce swelling. Check minor bleeding. Promote healing. You sit, walk in comfort! Only stainless pile remedy. Stainless Pazo® Suppositories or Ointment at all druggists today!

PROBLEM?

READ: Dr. Norman Vincent Peale in each issue of LOOK.

HEAR: Dr. Norman Vincent Peale every weekday morning at 10:05 EST on

NBC RADIO a service of RCA

The Southern dissenter is not a martyr legislature. Most of all, I wanted to know what this thing portended.

I've been trying to figure it out ever since. I think I've come up with some answers, and I'd like to say first that I'm not as worried as I was about Mississippi or our newspaper or anything except our politicians. Perhaps the reaction of so many of my home town and Southern fellow-citizens, and my fellow newspapermen, particularly in Mississippi, is what keeps me from being worried.

When I got home, I asked our two Greenville legislators what they thought about the resolution. Both had strongly defended me on the floor. Young Joe Wroten, a lawyer and a minister's son, didn't mince words. "Some of our people who pay lip service to constitutional government pay homage in practice to a government of men," he said. "The resolution was abortive thought-control by legislation against facts, and I don't like it. But maybe those venomous attacks on freedom of the press may wake people to the danger of a clandestine government of men." And Joe punned: "—a Klandestine klavern of men. . . ."

Jimmy Robertshaw, likewise a lawyer, was more amused than disturbed. "It's partly because they were scared, partly because they're sore at the Supreme Court and partly because they were on edge after twelve weeks of looking for money," he said. "And some of them, don't forget, are Council members. But I would like to think that they're ashamed, too, and don't want people outside to know that the Councils really exist."

Joe and Jimmy are two of the legislative minority that wouldn't go along. Numerically, they aren't important. But numerically and otherwise, the letters that continue to pile up as an aftermath of the LOOK article and its legislative sequel do seem to me to be important. I have received more than 2,000 letters about the Council piece. They've run about 3 to 2 in my favor in the South, and better than that elsewhere. Heartening is the preponderance of letters from young people, especially servicemen; clergymen of all faiths; educators and fellow-newspapermen, and the accent of so many of them has been upon the Christian challenge. The several hundred that quickly followed the resolution favored our side at least 10 to 1. I think this shows that Americans dislike seeing people ganged-up on.

It is significant, too, that the critical letters were overwhelmingly emotional, often anti-Semitic, and, when unsigned as many were, contained filthy personal attacks and threats. Some, of course, came from people honestly disturbed over the Supreme-Court ruling and wondering whether the Council's program of economic terrorism is not the South's only anti-integration weapon.

A man in Alaska sent $100 to be used as I saw fit to oppose the

continued

LOOK MISCHA RICHTER

"I invented him and he invented that."

LOOK GEORGE BOOTH

"Wrong button."

Councils. Three priests, each from different communities and one of them 300 miles away, came to Greenville within a few days of each other to offer aid and comfort to this battered Episcopalian. But an unidentified telephone caller told me to get out of town before I was carried out.

Less trivial than threats or insults have been the efforts at boycott, only spasmodic before the LOOK article appeared, but now accelerated. We've lost circulation in some areas, but we've managed to hold to our 12,500 average. We've been hurt a little in our commercial printing and office-supply sidelines. So far, none of our advertisers has knuckled under to the arrogant demands of Council spokesmen that they join the Councils, or take away their advertising from us on penalty of losing the trade of Council members. This economic weapon was announced last summer as being planned for use only against Negroes who tried to vote or enter their children in white schools, but it has been turned against anyone who doesn't go along with the Councils.

It seems to me that the general reaction to the legislature's blast, and the failure so far of any boycott, points up something that our non-Southern friends possibly don't know. The thinking people of Mississippi and the South are a long way ahead of their politicians; and those of us who seem to be in a completely rebuffed minority aren't as alone or as out of step as legislators and Councils might lead the outsider to believe.

I don't mean that many white Southerners are willing to have the public schools integrated now, especially in the deep South where numerical pressures are greatest. But they know that inflammatory political behavior and the formation of vigilante groups aren't the answer any more than would be a Supreme-Court edict ordering complete integration next fall. There must be a middle ground.

That brings up something personal. I've been pretty much a middle-of-the-roader all my life. Some of my fellow Southerners think otherwise. They've been conditioned largely by political demagogues to believe that anybody who challenges extremism in the South is in league with the Supreme Court, the N.A.A.C.P., the Communist party, the mass-circulation magazines and everybody north of the Mason-Dixon Line to destroy the Southern way of life. There's a lot of it I do want destroyed. There's a lot I want to keep.

And some of my non-Southern correspondents have been wrong also, though in a kindlier way. They envision a dangerous life for the Southern dissenter, or at the best, a social and economic martyrdom. That, I am glad to say, just isn't so, though it could have been twenty years ago.

We live normal small-town lives in Greenville. That means we're busy with all kinds of matters besides racial problems. Accord-

continued

Now you can get more "look-alive" snapshots...

...because

New ANSCO All-Weather Film "SEES RED"

Ordinary "chrome-type" films are color-blind to red. That's why you get results like this—with lips, hair and cheeks having a dark and "muddy" look, and with the bright red checks in the girl's jacket showing up as gloomy black.

New Ansco All-Weather Pan Film "sees red" to give you clearer, brighter black-and-white pictures like this. See how the lips, cheeks and hair now look their natural best—and how the red checks in the jacket now show up in lively tones of gray.

Get this new red box!
Single rolls priced the same as ordinary film. You save 15¢ with the Ansco 3-Roll Economy Pak.

ANSCO, Binghamton, N. Y. A Div. of General Aniline & Film Corp.
"From Research to Reality."

NEW Ansco ALL-WEATHER PAN

The premium-type panchromatic film at the regular price!

Braying demagogues can't stand forever

ing to my calendar for the general period between the LOOK article and the legislature's resolution, I was chairman, so help me, of the Rotary Club's Ladies Night; planned a spring boating week end with the skipper of the Sea Scouts whose unofficial flagship is the Mistuh Charley, and gave a wiener roast for the Cub Scouts, including my youngest, whose den father I am; met three times with my fellow directors of the Chamber of Commerce; awarded the annual Democrat-Times plaques to the outstanding man and woman citizen; served as ringmaster for our neighborhood teenagers' Cypress Saddle Club show; met with our monthly discussion group, a dozen business and professional men, in my home; judged a college and high-school newspaper contest; went to two square dances; attended the Tulane University annual Board of Visitors meeting; began work on a talk for the convention of the Mississippi Bankers Association; helped my wife entertain for two engaged daughters of friends, and for each of our two older sons home from college and school for Easter holidays; planned a board meeting of the Mississippi Historical Society, of which I'm president; and worked with my wife on the 150-year history of the Episcopal Diocese of Louisiana. This accounting is only partial, but it doesn't leave much time for scalawagging.

A great many of my friends, and uncounted thousands of other Southerners, are too busy to spend time on boycotts and threats even were they so inclined. A good many other thousands, however, do seem to have the time and inclination too. The Southern struggle, it seems to me, is not so much between two races as between these groups. In four or five deep Southern states, the Supreme Court and the Negro stand on the sidelines. In these states, integration is distant. In their public schools, it will be no more than token for as far ahead as I can see. The gradual adjustment will be aided by accompanying improvement in the Negro's economic status; by Negro migration which will reduce the pressure of numbers; by the tolerance of those who today are our young; and by the persistent growth of the idea that democracy and Christianity and man's responsibility for his brother are all facets of the same bright dream.

I know that against these forces, the South's braying demagogues, its Klans and Councils and Southern Gentlemen, Inc., cannot forever stand. As our eldest son, who is twenty, disdainfully told our ten-year-old, who has been delighted with all the excitement:

"If you think this is something, you should have been around when I was in the fifth grade. . . ."

Or when I was. END

"We're looking for the kind of young man who has the inner spark, the fire, the drive and determination to get to work on time in the morning!"

Honor 1955's

Your Hickok Award is Dad's reward!
He will be proud you remembered!
He will be honored you cared!

Present your Dad with the

HICKOK
Father·of·the·Year AWARD

FREE with every gift from the

Hickok Gift Show

Now at Finest Stores Everywhere

Because every son and daughter rightly believes his or her Dad to be the finest Father on earth, Hickok has had struck a beautiful golden Medal of Award for you to give to your Dad with your Hickok Medal-of-Award Gift on Father's Day, June 19th. To get this Medal just go to the nearest store featuring the great Hickok Gift Show, buy Dad his Hickok Gift, and ask for the Medal, for which there is no extra charge. Because the supply of these beautiful and treasured medallions is necessarily limited, we suggest you do your gift shopping now.

HAND·SKILLED BY

HICKOK

BELTS · JEWELRY
WALLETS · SUSPENDERS

†Actual size 1¼" in diameter
© 1955 Hickok Mfg. Co., Rochester 1, N. Y.

*Prices plus Fed. Tax

Clips - Civil Liberties

Manifesto of the Civil Liberties Union

By R. Carter Pittman
Dalton, Ga.

Note by Editor Alabama Lawyer. In the Congressional Record of May 6, 1958, appears an article entitled The Secret Manifesto of the Civil Liberties Union. Hon. Herman Talmadge, the distinguished junior United States Senator from Georgia placed the article in The Record at pages 7246, 7247. The American Bar Association Journal, where the Manifesto was published, declined to publish Mr. Pittman's commentary on the Manifesto. The Alabama Lawyer is glad to publish this commentary by a great and courageous American lawyer. W.B.J.

Mr. Talmadge. Mr. President, much attention and publicity have been given to a statement by a group of 100 so-called representative lawyers, declaring it a duty to recognize decisions of the Supreme Court as the supreme law of the land.

That statement was first published in the December 1956 issue of the American Bar Association Journal, and was reprinted in the Congressional Record in January 1957. It was not until April of this year, however, that the identity of its sponsors and the circumstances surrounding its preparation were made public in the publication of hearings held by the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

In order to set the record straight about the questionable motives and background of the initiators of this statement, a noted member of the Georgia bar and a recognized authority on constitutional law, Hon. R. Carter Pittman, of Dalton, Ga., has written an article, which he has submitted to the American Bar Association Journal, setting forth all the facts which now have been brought out about this matter.

Mr. Pittman's article is most revealing; and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that it be printed herewith in the body of the Record.

I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have printed following it in the body of the Record, Mr. Pittman's article giving the true definition of "the law of the land," as it appeared in volume 6, No. 2, of the Journal of Public Law of the Emory University Law School, of Atlanta, Ga.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Ala Lawyer
Jan. ~~May~~ 1959

The Secret Manifesto of the Civil Liberties Union, Signed by 100 "Representative" Lawyers

The December 1956 issue of the American Bar Association Journal published an article entitled "Recent Attacks Upon the Supreme Court: A Statment by Members of the Bar." In a foreword Hon. George Wharton Pepper, a respected and aged attorney of Philadelphia, stated that he was submitting it for publication and bringing it to public attention for a "representative group of American lawyers" whose names were affixed to it.

Both before and since publication by the Journal, it was reproduced in many newspapers throughout the Nation, in many State and local bar association journals and, in January 1957, was printed in the Congressional Record.

That statement was an attempt to answer statements, speeches, and articles by numerous constitutional authorities, Members of Congress, newspaper editors, and others critical of the Supreme Court and charging the Court with usurpation of power.

Among the doctrine propounded in the statement, that appeared peculiar to many, was the following:

"The privilege of criticizing a decision of the Supreme Court carries with it a corresponding obligation – a duty to recognize the decision as the supreme law of the land as long as it remains in force."

That doctrine seemed peculiar because it purports to take the Court from under the Constitution and put it over the Constitution. It reduces the Constitution from the dignity of a founding charter, commanding faithful support by all, including judges, to an expedient to be used by any with the naked power to command. Sociology, chance, caprice, or the will of judges, not elected by the people or amenable to their will, were thus made paramount over the Constitution – and the people too.

That strange doctrine challenges the fundamental principle that forms the basis of all republics, which requires all laws to be made by or with the consent of the people.

Decisions, decrees or edicts have never been accepted or enforced as "the supreme law of the land" anywhere except in totalitarian lands. Government by consent of the governed, under laws enacted by their representatives elected for such purpose, is the very definition of a republican government of laws. Government without the consent of the governed is the very definition of a despotism.

The mystery as to the influences that brought about the preparation and formulation of the amazing statement seems to have remained secret until February 1958. The publication of the hearings of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate around April 1, 1958, first made it public.

The second signer of that statement was Mr. Ernest Angell, of New York City. On February 27, 1958, Mr. Angell testified before the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate against imposition of any curbs on the Supreme Court. On page 214 of part II of the hearings Mr. Angell took the position that the Supreme Court may make the law of the land, not by the process of legislating but by the process of declaring. He contended that the Court may not only make law, but that it may convene itself into a constitutional convention and change the Constitution itself "in the sense of adaptation." Mr. Sourwine, counsel for the Senate committee, inquired:

"In other words, it is merely changing the meaning of the Constitution in accordance with the Supreme Court's finding, according to the social atmosphere of the country?"

To which Mr. Angell replied:

"Social atmosphere, practical necessities of the society, business demands, the growth of industry beyond the capacity of a single State unit effectively to control it — there are many reasons for adaptation."

On page 215 Mr. Angell evidenced great pride in the statement, mentioned above, saying with becoming modesty:

"I had a hand in initiating it."

On page 126 he continued:

"The circulation was originally undertaken from Senator Pepper's office in the summer of 1956 after it had been prepared. At that point, being then, well, I forget whether it was 89, or some such age, nearly that, he became ill and couldn't go to his office regularly. The development happened upon me as one of the original starting group, and I sent out the statement to this larger group after some 30 or 40 of us had already indicated our approval of it. When the letters of approval, all of them in writing, had come in from slightly over a hundred lawyers, we then put it out as a public release and statement. It appeared in the American Bar Association Journal."

The questions by Mr. Sourwine and answers of Mr. Angell continue:

"Mr. Sourwine. It was widely printed?

"Mr. Angell. Yes; it was very widely printed. We produced it in whole or in part in a great many newspapers around the country and in full in a number of local bar associations.

"Mr. Sourwine. You drafted the statement?

"Mr. Angell. I had no part in drafting the statement. It was done by a man who is a scholar in constitutional law, one of the original group whom we drew in one of the small conferences with Senator Pepper.

"Mr. Sourwine. Who was the drafter?

"Mr. Angell. Prof. Paul Froyen [sic], of Harvard Law School, who in his younger years had been a secretary to one of the Justices of the Supreme Court. I have forgotten now which one.

"Mr. Sourwine. His name is well known?

"Mr. Angell. Yes; he is recognized as an outstanding scholar.

"Mr. Sourwine. I thought it was of considerable interest to develop that."

Many others agree with Mr. Sourwine that it was "of considerable interest to develop that."

At the beginning of his testimony Mr. Angell introduced himself as a lawyer with a New York City address, saying:

"I appear on behalf of the American Civil Liberties Union, of which I am chairman of the board of directors."

Martindale's Legal Directory reveals some extraordinary information about this "representative group of American lawyers," to which Senator Pepper referred. One hundred and three names were affixed to the statement. The school affiliations of only 95 could be be found. While the graduates of Harvard Law School represents perhaps less than one-twentieth of 1 percent of all the lawyers in America, 32 out of the 95, or more than 33⅓ percent of the representative group were Harvard men. By way of contrast, the school furnishing the next largest number was Michigan with 7.

Certainly not more than one-tenth of 1 percent of the lawyers in America are professors. However, Martindale's reveals that 21 percent of the 95 in this representative group were of the cap and gown variety.

Thus it unmistakably appears from Martindale's and the voluntary assertions of Mr. Angell that the good name and high reputation of Hon. George Wharton Pepper who, at the age of 89, was so ill and infirm that he couldn't go to his office regularly, was used as a front by the American Civil Liberties Union and dubious segment of the Harvard Alumni Society to lead the editors of the American Bar Association Journal, the members of the American Bar Association and the generality of the American people into the belief that an impartial, and indeed a representative group of more than 100 American lawyers was bold to proclaim that the Supreme Court of the United States may not only make the law of the land, but may make the supreme law of the land.

The February 1958 issue of the American Bar Association Journal carries an article by Hon. Alfred J. Schweppe, of Seattle, Wash., former dean of the law school of the University of Washington, a constitutional lawyer of national repute and one of the editors of the Journal, which demonstrates authoritatively and conclusively that the Supreme Court of the United States has no power to make the law of the land much less the power to make the supreme law of the land.

Since the true authorship and the sponsorship of the so-called statement by a so-called "representative group of American lawyers has been kept secret from the American people for almost 2 years, this disclosure and exposure of the secret is made with the hope (vain as it may prove to be) that the press, that was so generously free to those who promulgated the statement, will feel free to demonstrate a decent respect for the rights of the American people to know the whole truth. If the people want to pardon or sanction a deception they may do it, but the press is not free to do it for them.

R. CARTER PITTMAN
Dalton, Ga.

Announcement

R. A. NORRED and JACK WILSON announce that ROBERT B. PROPST has become a member of the firm and the removal of their offices to 906 Commercial National Bank Building, Anniston, Alabama, where they will engage in the general practice of law as NORRED, WILSON & PROPST.

SIMPLIFY ALABAMA RESEARCH with these proven, authoritative reference works. Any unit now available on low, monthly terms.

AMERICAN JURISPRUDENCE
AM. JUR. LEGAL FORMS ANNOTATED
AM. JUR. PLEADING & PRACTICE FORMS ANNOTATED
AMERICAN LAW REPORTS* and A.L.R. 2d*
A.L.R. PERMANENT DIGEST
U.S. REPORTS L. ED.* and ANNOTATED DIGEST

*Also available in space-saving MICROLEX. Write today for information and details of liberal terms.

BANCROFT-WHITNEY COMPANY

McAllister & Hyde Streets San Francisco 1, California

Asbury Howard Tells His Version Of The Bessemer "Vote Sign Case" Involving Him

Editor's note:—In the interest of clarification, the Birmingham World is publishing today Asbury Howard's account of events, details, and additional background material in connection with a case in which he was arrested, fined and sentenced. Because some of the details he supplies seem to cast additional light on case, we see fit to publish the personal account by Mr. Howard.—Emory O. Jackson)

BY ASBURY HOWARD

On Saturday, January 24, 1959, I was tried in the Bessemer City Recorder's Court: James Hammonds, Presiding Judge.

My attorney, David H. Hood, Jr., and I reached the City Hall at approximately 8:30 a. m. As we entered the lobby a police officer was standing at the entrance to the stairway. He demanded to search the brief case of the attorney for a pistol or gun. He informed the attorney that he was acting under orders. When the officers gave us permission to go, we proceeded upstairs to the courtroom. When my case was called, Judge Hammonds said that I was charged with violating 25-72 of the city code of Bessemer, Alabama as amended.

Through my attorney, I pleaded not guilty (25-72 deals with obscene libelous publications causing breach of the peace, etc.)

I testified that I directed the sign painter to print the cartoon out of the "Kansas City Call," a a newspaper dated December 26, 1958. I added to the cartoon "Vote Today for a Better Tomorrow." The sign painter had completed the cartoon all but the Caption: "Hands That Can Still Pray." My purpose for having this sign painted was to carry it to the Bessemer Voter's League meeting which is held once a month. I told this to Chief George W. Barron before he arrested me. Chief Barron then asked me why didn't I have some posters made and tack them on the posts. I said: I am a law abiding citizen, and I have no intention of violating any laws, and I didn't think having a cartoon from a newspaper reprinted was violating the city law.

The painter was given the cartoon about two weeks before the day I was arrested. He was told to go slow. My reason for telling him this was that I wanted to check with the entire Bessemer Voters League executive committee, "The Call," Kansas City and my attorney. I presented this newspaper in court, but I was found guilty by the City Recorder and sentenced to six months in jail, plus one hundred dollars ($100) in cost.

While my attorney, Hood, was perfecting my appeal bond, my wife, son, and I proceeded out of the courtroom located on the second floor, and down the stairs to the ground floor where white men lined up from the front door to the stairway on both sides. As I stepped down to the last step, I was struck from the rear. It was such a hard blow that it knocked me off my feet, and then the crowd lined up around the wall began to strike, and beat me about the head, face, and body, necessitating ten stitches being taken on my head.

During this time, my son, Asbury Howard, Jr., was also being assaulted and struck by these white men. My son was then arrested and placed under $600 bond being charged with disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

I wish to make clear that this sign had never been on display nor was it in my possession at the time of my arrest, because it was still on the painter's bench.

The Birmingham News in reporting on the incident mentioned that I was a Vice-President of the Mine-Mill and Smelter Workers (Union). I am a Vice-President and have been elected by the membership in United States and Canada for (2) two-year terms. It was also mentioned about an incident that happened in 1952 and stated that I was fined $500. To that, I wish to clarify, I was tried in the City Court of Bessemer and found not guilty. The county also had a charge against two white men and myself. Following advice from counsel, we pleaded "no lo contendant" "no protest". Each person was to be fined $250. One of the white men was out of the state at the time, and so it was agreed by my council that the $250 fine would be assessed against me. (however, Attorney Hood, who is the lawyer for our Bessemer Voter's League, and was not my lawyer during this $500 fine agreement, had advised me not to accept this responsibility of having fines assessed against me for any person, as this would be a permanent record against me. Nevertheless I did not heed his advice so that he wouldn't have to come back to the state to appear in court. The question of an indictment was mentioned. To that I wish to state that our organization has already stated to the public, in no certain terms that neither I nor the men indicted are guilty of the charge lodged against them and I know that I am not. I am grateful to live in a country where a man is considered innocent until he is proven guilty.

Furthermore, the officers and executive board of our union, has publicly made it clear that this union not only had no connections with the Communist Party or communism, but also that our union and its leaders had nothing in common with the aims of the Communist Party. However, the Bible instructs us "to judge not by words but by deeds" and it is on this basis alone that I invite judgement on the Mine Mill and Smelter Workers (Union) and those of us who have been charged with wrong-doing.

I am a native Alabamian, and have been a resident of Bessemer for 42 years. I have been an active leader in church, and in community affairs during most of these years. I am President of the Bessemer's Voter's League and have been elected by the people eight times.

All of my adult life I have fought for the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to our Constitution and for democracy in general. I thank God that I live in a country where I can fight for these great principles.

In our fight for first class citizenship we must not forget to pray. Remember the caption on the cartoon which caused my arrest: "Hands that Can Still Pray." While other organizations are calling for violence and bloodshed, we must always remember our theme: "Prayer and Non-Violence." No matter what happened and amount of bloodshed, stay on bending knees. As I was being attacked by the mob, I was informed later that there was an old Negro gentleman praying with a loud voice and with his head toward the heaven, asking the Lord to come now because we need you. I believe and know this prayer was answered. Nothing could have saved my life from this mob, but a God, and I humbly thank Him. The fight for first class citizenship through the ballot will continue. "Freedom's Price Comes High. Whatever the Price for my People I am Willing to Pay it."

I feel like the young Patrick Henry who said standing in Philadelphia one day, "Is life so dear and peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chain and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death." Signed: Asbury Howard, Sr.

Birmingham World

Feb. 4, 1959

Civil Liberties

EDUCATION

The Dotted Line

Time 2/16/59

Years after the squabble seemed to have been won, U.S. colleges and universities last week were skirmishing with their old hoodoo, the loyalty oath. Source of the trouble: a paragraph in last summer's $887 million National Defense Education Act, which provides that to qualify for a loan or fellowship, a student must 1) swear allegiance to the U.S., and 2) affirm that he "does not believe in, and is not a member of and does not support any organization that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the U.S. Government by force or violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods."

Walter Bennett

SENATOR MUNDT
Farmers get billions without a word.

By week's end, six schools—Bryn Mawr, Haverford, Antioch, Princeton, Swarthmore and Reed—had refused to accept money under the act. Other schools are accepting funds but protesting the oaths. Presidents Nathan Pusey of Harvard and A. Whitney Griswold of Yale praised Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Arthur Flemming for criticizing the oaths, and Griswold wrote: "In our eyes, such measures are at best odious symbols, at worst a potential threat to our profession . . . Belief cannot be coerced or compelled." Other institutions whose heads object to the provision: Colby, Bates, Bowdoin, the University of Wisconsin and Atlanta's Emory University.

Particularly irksome to the colleges is the apparent implication that students and professors are more suspect than other groups. Said Carleton's President Laurence M. Gould: "We give $6 billion to the farmers but don't expect any loyalty oath." Said President Courtney Smith of Swarthmore: "Sheer nonsense. You don't start out by saying that you don't trust your students, by asking a 17-year-old freshman to take an oath."

Surprised at the uproar, South Dakota's Republican Senator Karl Mundt, an old schoolteacher himself, said he wrote in the oaths provision because "it would be the height of absurdity to make funds available to Communists or saboteurs under the heading of national defense." He conceded that Communists would not hesitate to take the oath, said that if they did so, at least they would be guilty of breach of contract. In Congress the oaths are gathering enemies. Three bills to repeal them were introduced in the House. And in the Senate, Massachusetts' John Kennedy, who co-sponsored a repeal bill with Pennsylvania's Joseph Clark, called Mundt's anti-Communist mousetrap "an unnecessary, futile gesture toward the memory of an earlier age."

Civil Liberties

Civil Liberties - 1959

WE THE AMERICAN PEOPLE:

Guided in the past 176 years by the great and Universal truths of our Declaration of Independence, have built for ourselves,
Within the framework of freedom and opportunity,
A Great Nation----
With the highest standard of living in world history.

And Yet today,

More than ever since July 4, 1776
We must make still another declaration.

A DECLATATION OF DEPENDENCE

WE THE AMERICAN PEOPLE:

Assert ourselves to be a Brotherhood
The All-for American team

Men and women of all races and all creeds
Working together, laughing together and even dying together.

Men and women of all creeds and all races
Needing each other and depending on each other.

Depending upon every American never to put his personal gain or that of his business, or that of his labor organization or that of his constituents, ahead of the welfare of our people as a whole.

Depending upon an abiding faith that free men, will resolute will to remain free, can out-think, out build and, when necessary, out-fight any who try to destroy that Freedom.

Depending upon free nations, united in the common good of all mankind,
to preserve peace in a troubled world.

Depending upon speech and a free press upon an enlightened rather than a frightened people and upon armed preparedness only while the "live and let live" alternative is forbidden us.

And always depending upon prayer
And reverently upon God
to guide us in the right,

For only by declaring this Dependence can we hold fast our Freedom our way of life - and our Independence.

Freedom Sought From Jail For "Prayer Poster"

Civil Liberties

FEB 27 1959 ATLANTA DAILY WORLD

Bessemer Leader Given Six Months For Freedom Poster

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (SNS) — The intervention of President Eisenhower in the case of a Negro civic and union leader now serving a six months conviction for ordering a poster portraying a Negro praying to God for help to win equal rights has been requested by civic, union and religious leaders.

Asbury Howard, Sr., 52, president of the Bessemer Voters League and deacon in the Starlight Baptist Church began serving a six-month jail term Feb. 23 after losing an appeal on a technicality.

Circuit Judge Gardner F. Goodwin, Jr. dismissed the appeal from a Jan. 24 conviction on charges of violating a local ordinance prohibiting the publication of "intemperate matter tending to provoke a breach of peace, or and matter prejudicial to good morals." Mr. Howard had been fined $100 also in the same case.

ASBURY HOWARD

The chain-ganging of Asbury Howard, president of the Bessemer, Ala. Voters League and International vice-president of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, came promptly after his appeal for a new trial was turned down by a Jefferson County court.

In a telegram to the President, Raymond Dennis, executive board member of the union, declared that "each day we allow Asbury Howard to remain chained on the streets of Alabama for the "crime" of having a poster painted which portrayed his faith in God's fairness to all men makes our proclamations for freedom and democracy abroad a sham in the eyes of other nations."

The now-famous "prayer poster" case which saw the 52-year-old Howard and his son beaten inside the Bessemer Court House by an anti-Negro mob with police nearby, was regarded here by civic leaders as a desperate and flagrant act.

Howard is regarded as one of Bessemer's most outstanding Negro civic leaders.

Meanwhile, the Chicago Afro-American Heritage Association joined with the American Civil Liberties Union in demanding full-scale federal probe of Howard's attack and conviction.

Leo F. Sparks, president of the Association, reported that a national campaign had been launched by that organization to reverse Howard's conviction and declared that the freeing of the Southern leader was one of "the most significant struggles for the achievement of democracy and the establishment of civil liberties in the nation."

Judge Goodwyn ruled that the Circuit Court was without juridiction to consider the case since "no valid and legal appeal has been perfected in the Circuit Court."

Atty. David H. Hood, Jr., who represented Mr. Howard prepared a series of writ which he said he would file seeking to get relief in the case. Reporters were unsuccessful in trying to contact him Wednesday for a statement.

Mr. Howard is eastern vice-president of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Worker Union.

When Mr. Howard left the Bessemer courtroom Jan. 24, he was savagedly attacked, he said, by a mob. His son, Asbury Howard, Jr., who came to his rescue was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. His case has twice been postponed.

Mr. Howard was arrested Jan. 21. He had given a sign painter a cartoon taken from one of the national Negro weeklies, to reproduce.

(Continued on Page 6, Col. 4)

Freedom Sought

(Continued From Page One)

The cartoon carried the drawing of a Negro in chains praying, "Lord, Help . . ." A line to be added to the poster read, "Vote Today for a Better Tomorrow."

The sign painter, J. McAlister, was also arrested and placed under similar charges as lodged against Mr. Howard. At trial, he drew identical punishment.

The poster was never completed. It was not distributed.

ATTORNEY GENERAL WRITTEN

Meanwhile Patrick Murphy Malin, executive director of ACLU, made public a letter sent to Attorney General Rogers urging a federal inquiry into the Howard case.

The ACLU leader in supporting the case declared that "The beating of an American citizen by a mob in the presence of the local police is not only of importance to the citizen under attack, but to all Americans who believe in the sanctity of the law and fair treatment by law-enforcement officials. Whenever necessary, the federal government should act to safeguard these principles."

Malin stated that "at least a de facto conspiracy had occurred when, in violation of the federal civil rights law, police officers stood by as two citizens were assualted in the City Hall while there under compulsory process."

The painting which touched off the Howard arrest by Bessemer police had been confiscated from a local white artist whom the Negro leader had hired for the poster.

Charged with violating a Bessemer city ordinance against "obscene, lewd, nude, scurrilous, libelous" publication, both Howard and the white artist had been sentenced by Judge James Hammond to a $105 fine and six months in jail pending appeal to a higher court.

Among those Southern leaders and organizations protesting the jailing of Howard were the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, of Montgomery, Ala., the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham leader, along with the Bessemer Ministerial Alliance and the Baptist Ministers Alliance in Bessemer.

Civil Liberties, - 1959

Asbury Howard Begins Serving Jail Term After Losing Appeal

BESSEMER, Ala. — (BNS) — Asbury Howard, Sr. 52-year-old president of the Bessemer Voters League and deacon in the Starlight Baptist Church began serving a six-month jail term Feb. 23 after losing an appeal on a technicality.

Circuit Judge Gardner F. Goodwin, Jr. dismissed the appeal from a Jan. 24 conviction on charges of violating a local ordinance prohibiting the publication of "intemperate matter tending to provoke a breach of peace, or and matter prejudicial to good morals." Mr. Howard had been fined $105 also in the same case.

Judge Goodwyn ruled that the Circuit Court was without juridiction to consider the case since "no valid and legal appeal has been perfected in the Circuit Court."

Atty. David H. Hood, Jr., who

(Continued On Back Page)

ASBURY HOWARD

Asbury Howard

(Continued From Page One)

represented Mr. Howard prepared a series of writ which he said he would file seeking to get relief in the case. Reporters were unsuccessful in trying to contact him Wednesday for a statement.

Mr. Howard is eastern vice-president of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Worker Union.

When Mr. Howard left the Bessemer courtroom Jan. 24, he was savagedly attacked, he said, by a mob. His son, Asbury Howard, Jr., who came to his rescue was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. His case has twice been postponed.

Mr. Howard was arrested Jan. 21. He had given a sign painter a cartoon taken from one of the national Negro weeklies, to reproduce. The cartoon carried the drawing of a Negro in chains praying, "Lord, Help ..." A line to be added to the poster read, "Vote Today for a Better Tomorrow."

The sign painter, J. McAlister, was also arrested and placed under similar charges as lodged against Mr. Howard. At trial, he drew identical punishment.

The poster was never completed. It was not distributed.

Birmingham World
Feb 28 '59

Civil Liberties

Ike Asked To Free Asbury Howard From Alabama Chain Gang Sentence

The intervention of President Eisenhower in the case of a Negro civic and union leader now serving a six months conviction on an Alabama chain gang for ordering a poster portraying a Negro praying to God for help to win equal rights, has been requested by civic, union and religious leaders.

The chain-ganging of Asbury Howard, president of the Bessemer, Ala. Voters League and International vice-president of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, came promptly after his appeal for a new trial was turned by a Jefferson County court.

In a telegram to the President, Raymond Dennis, executive board member of the union, declared that "each day we allow Asbury Howard to remain chained on the streets of Alabama for the "crime" of having a poster painted which portrayed his faith in God's fairness to all men makes our proclamations for freedom and democracy abroad a sham in the eyes of other nations."

Negro Civic, Union Leaders Gets 6-Mo. Sentence In Bessemer

The now-famous "prayer poster" case which saw the 52-year-old Howard and his son beaten inside the Bessemer Court House by an anti-Negro mob with police nearby, was regarded here by civic leaders as a desperate and flagrant act.

Howard is regarded as one of Bessemer's most outstanding Negro civic leaders.

Meanwhile, the Chicago Afro-American Heritage Association joined with the American Civil Liberties Union in demanding full-scale federal probe of Howard's attack and conviction.

Leo F. Sparks, president of the Association, reported that a national campaign had been launched by that organization to reverse Howard's conviction and declared that the freeing of the Southern leader was one of "the most significant struggles for the achievement of democracy and the establishment of civil liberties in the nation."

ATTORNEY GENERAL WRITTEN

Meanwhile Patrick Murphy Malin, executive director of ACLU, made public a letter sent to Attorney General Rogers urging a federal inquiry into the Howard case.

The ACLU leader in supporting

(Continued On Back Page)

Ike Asked To

(Continued From Page One)

the case declared that "The beating of an American citizen by a mob in the presence of the local police is not only of importance to the citizen under attack, but to all Americans who believe in the sanctity of the law and fair treatment by law-enforcement officials. Whenever necessary, the federal government should act to safeguard these principles."

Malin stated that "at least a de facto conspiracy had occurred when, in violation of the federal civil rights law, police officers stood by as two citizens were assualted in the City Hall while there under compulsory process."

The painting which touched off the Howard arrest by Bessemer police had been confiscated from a local white artist whom the Negro leader had hired for the poster.

Charged with violating a Bessemer city ordinance against "obscene, lewd, nude, scurrilous libelous" publication, both Howard and the white artist had been sentenced by Judge James Hammond to a $105 fine and six months in jail pending appeal to a higher court.

Among those Southern leaders and organizations protesting the jailing of Howard were the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, of Montgomery, Ala., the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham leader, along with the Bessemer Ministerial Alliance and the Baptist Ministers Alliance in Bessemer.

ACLU Asks Federal Government To Probe Bessemer, Ala. Beating

NEW YORK, N. Y. — The American Civil Liberties Union has called on the federal government to investigate the beating of a Negro civic leader of Bessemer, Ala., by a mob inside the Bessemer City Hall while local police made no effort to help him.

The civil liberties organization urged the Justice Department to probe the incident to determine if federal civil rights laws had been violated and "to take all steps necessary to see that the offenders are properly and promptly dealt with." At a press conference here, ACLU executive director Patrick Murphy Malin made public a letter sent on February 19 to Attorney General Rogers urging a federal inquiry into the Asbury Howard case. Howard, head of the Bessemer Voters League, a Negro organization which seeks to advance the rights of Negroes to vote, was convicted on January 24 for seeking to reproduce a newspaper cartoon expressing the desire of Negro citizens for equal treatment under law. Following the conviction, Howard was assaulted by a mob of more than 40 men in the City Hall and received severe head injuries. A group of 15 local policemen in the building did not intervene. Howard's son, Asbury, Jr., who came to his father's aid, was also injured. He was then arrested for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

Informing the Attorney General that the ACLU is supporting the Howard case because of the "serious invasion of civil liberties," Malin wrote, "The beating of an American citizen by a mob in the presence of the local police is not only of importance to the citizen under attack, but to all Americans who believe in the sanctity of the law and fair treatment of law-enforcement officials. Whenever necessary, the federal government should act to safeguard these principles."

Birmingham World
Feb. 28, 1959

Civil Liberties

Release Sought For A. Howard

BESSEMER, Ala.—Atty Arthur D. Shores of Birmingham has joined with Atty. David H. Hood, Jr., in seeking the release of Asbury Howard, Sr., 52-year-old president of the Bessemer Voters League and deacon of the Starlight Baptist Church who is currenly serving a 180-day prison sentence in the strange "Vote Sign Case."

Shores and Hood were unsuccessful in their effort to get either an appeal from the six-month jail term and $105 fine or to free Mr Howard on bond in a series of legal manuevers. They said last weekend they planned to carry the bitter legal fight to the Alabama Supreme Court.

Circuit Judge Edward L. Ball on Feb. 26 rejected a writ of habeaus corpus and also turned down a request for a bond. He also threw out an attack on the constitutionality of the ordinance and held that the Recorder Court had jurirdiction in the case.

The defense lawyers filed a writ of certiorari with the Alabama Supreme Court and suggested that they would press for an ex parte hearing.

But they faced an uphill battle Atty. Hood said that Judge Ball's written opinion on the issues raised before him had not been issued (2) The clerk of the court could take advantage of the 30-day period in getting the transcript of the case (3) The ruling by Judge Goodwyn that the appeal was invalid blunted the legal weapons which otherwise might be used.

Under Bessemer law, as explained by the defense lawyers, to appeal the defendant must post an appeal bond bearing two surities or licensed bonding agency with the written approval of the Recorder or Mayor. It was added that the practice has been to merely post the appeal bond. The appeal papers filed on behalf of Mr. Howard did not carry either the approval of the Recorder or the Mayor. That made it invalid, under strict following of the law.

Foundation has appealed to President Eisenhower to intervene in the jail-term development.

What Bessemer civic leaders were doing with respect to the "Vote Sign Case" was not immediately determined.

Mr. Howard is eastern vice-president of Mill, Mine and Smelter Workers Union. He has been one of the center-of-struggle leaders in Bessemer where he has lived for 42 years.

The 30-day appeal period had expired when Mr. Howard appeared Feb. 23 for what was expected to be an appeal trial. Mr. Howard was then placed in jail and assigned to a street labor crew.

Bond was denied him subsequently on the ground that when no appeal is taken and one begins his sentance it is too late to get bond.

Mr. Howard was arrested Jan. 21, along with Alfred J. McAllister, white sign painter for allegedly violating an ordinance forbidding the publication and circulation of "intemperate matter tending to provoke a breach of the peace, or any matter prejudicial to good morals." Atty Hood said he was also representing Mr. McAllister.

For 30 days, Mr. Howard was out on what was thought to be an appeal bond, Atty Hood said. He added that Hand Bonding Company made the bond which Mr. Hood said he and another person signed.

The American Civil Liberties Union has urged the federal government to probe the alleged mob-style attack on Mr. Howard which occurred in the Bessemer City Hall. The American Heritage

Birmingham World
Mar 4, '59

Civil Liberties

CIVIL LIBERTIES

NUMBER 168, MARCH 1959

Published monthly, except in July and August, by the AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION 170 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y.

Ernest Angell
Chairman, Board of Directors
John Haynes Holmes
Norman Thomas
Directors Emeritus
E. B. MacNaughton
Chairman, National Committee
Dorothy Dunbar Bromley
August Heckscher
Elmer Rice
Vice-Chairmen, Board of Directors
Edward J. Ennis
Osmond K. Fraenkel
General Counsel
Dorothy Kenyon
Secretary
B. W. Huebsch
Treasurer
Patrick Murphy Malin
Executive Director

Entered as second-class matter June 20, 1938, at the Post Office in New York, N.Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879. Re-entered as second-class matter October 11, 1949, at the New York Post Office under the same Act. Subscription: by membership $2, $3, $10, $25, and up, of which 50¢ is for one year of CIVIL LIBERTIES.

Jeffrey E. Fuller, Editor

COMMENTARY ON CHART AT RIGHT

The table at the right indicates how far the ACLU has come in its first thirty-nine years—and in the past ten years: in 1949, for example, the Union's membership was but 10,000 (nearly half in New York), and the ratio of members per 100,000 was 6.5.

It also makes clear how far the Union has yet to go—in membership growth (especially in the South and in the Plains-Mountain states), in affiliate and chapter development, and in building its corps of volunteer cooperating attorneys.

When considering the membership figures, it should be kept in mind that a husband and wife who do not pay separate dues are counted as one member. Also, there is no sure way of knowing how many of the national organization's 1,800 members in Northern California also belong to the un-integrated Northern California affiliate, which has 4,000 of its own members.

Of the twenty-four affiliates, six have full-time offices: Massachusetts, New York City, Ohio, Illinois, Northern California, and Southern California; two, Pennsylvania and Greater Philadelphia, share one full-time office. Five employ part-time secretaries: Maryland, Indiana, Minnesota, Colorado, and Washington. Eleven operate on a volunteer basis with some paid clerical help: Connecticut, Niagara Frontier (Buffalo), Florida, Louisiana, Detroit, Lansing, Kentucky, Wisconsin, Iowa, St. Louis, and Oregon.

The figures on cooperating attorneys represent currently active lawyers with whom the national office or the affiliate in their state has been in touch within the past two years. The 630 total is probably 200 below the actual figure, because only the Florida, Indiana and Pennsylvania-Philadelphia affiliates have reported statistics on their attorneys.

ACLU GEOGRAPHY—JANUARY 1, 1959

	Population, in millions	Rank by population	Number of ACLU members	Members per 100,000 pop.	Rank, members per pop.	ACLU Nat'l Committee	ACLU Affiliates	Chapters of Affiliates	Cooperating Attorneys
Northeast	49.8	—	18,418	37.0	—	42	7	12	263
Maine	0.9	36	95	10.6	27	—	—	—	4
New Hampshire	0.6	45	147	24.5	16	2	—	—	2
Vermont	0.4	47	108	27.0	12	—	—	—	3
Massachusetts	4.9	9	2,320	47.3	5	5	1	3	20
Rhode Island	0.8	40	152	19.0	18	—	—	—	4
Connecticut	2.9	26	1,125	49.0	4	3	1	3	18
New York	16.8	1	8,553	50.9	3	18	2	1	112
New Jersey	5.6	8	1,600	28.6	10	3	—	1	22
Pennsylvania	11.2	3	2,785	24.9	15	4	2	4	56
Delaware	0.4	46	111	27.8	11	—	—	—	1
Maryland	3.5	22	762	25.4	14	1	1	—	4
West Virginia	2.0	30	42	2.1	47	—	—	—	2
Dist. of Columbia	0.9	37	618	68.7	2	6	—	—	15
Southeast	32.3	—	1,703	5.3	—	9	2	1	74
Virginia	3.8	16	312	8.2	31	—	—	—	9
North Carolina	4.4	11	228	5.2	42	1	—	—	14
South Carolina	2.4	25	39	1.6	49	—	—	—	2
Georgia	3.8	15	111	3.0	45	4	—	—	6
Florida	4.1	13	583	14.2	24	2	1	1	10
Tennessee	3.5	17	139	4.0	44	1	—	—	6
Alabama	3.2	19	56	1.8	48	1	—	—	6
Mississippi	2.2	27	23	1.0	50	—	—	—	2
Arkansas	1.8	32	46	2.6	46	—	—	—	11
Louisiana	3.1	20	166	5.4	41	—	1	—	8
Midwest	49.2	—	10,059	20.4	—	11	10	14	149
Michigan	7.9	7	1,153	14.6	20	—	2	—	23
Ohio	9.6	5	1,988	20.7	17	2	1	9	34
Indiana	4.6	10	822	18.0	19	1	1	4	20
Kentucky	3.1	21	216	7.0	37	—	1	1	8
Wisconsin	3.9	14	560	14.4	23	1	1	1	18
Illinois	9.7	4	3,464	35.7	6	3	1	—	12
Minnesota	3.3	18	880	26.7	13	—	1	—	12
Iowa	2.7	24	341	12.6	25	2	1	—	7
Missouri	4.4	12	635	14.4	22	2	1	—	15
Plains-Mountain	23.2	—	2,031	8.8	—	6	1	1	80
Texas	9.4	6	402	4.3	43	2	—	—	24
Oklahoma	2.2	28	134	6.0	39	—	—	—	8
Kansas	2.2	29	176	8.0	34	2	—	—	9
Nebraska	1.4	34	88	6.3	38	—	—	—	3
South Dakota	0.7	41	38	5.4	40	—	—	—	—
North Dakota	0.7	42	51	7.3	36	—	—	—	5
New Mexico	0.9	39	130	14.4	21	—	—	—	2
Colorado	1.7	33	607	35.7	7	2	1	1	18
Wyoming	0.3	48	31	10.3	29	—	—	—	—
Montana	0.7	43	73	10.4	28	—	—	—	5
Arizona	1.2	35	145	12.1	26	—	—	—	3
Utah	0.9	38	75	8.3	32	—	—	—	2
Nevada	0.3	49	28	9.3	30	—	—	—	—
Idaho	0.6	44	53	8.8	31	—	—	—	1
Pacific Coast	19.4	—	12,062	62.2	—	8	4	20	49
California	14.5	2	10,675	73.6	1	6	2	19	23
Oregon	1.8	31	528	29.3	9	1	1	—	14
Washington	2.8	23	836	29.9	8	1	1	1	10
Alaska	0.3	50	23	7.7	35	—	—	—	2
Outside Cont'l U.S.	3.7	—	227	—	—	—	—	—	3
Hawaii	0.7	—	46	6.6	—	—	—	—	—
Puerto Rico	2.8	—	22	0.8	—	—	—	—	3
Other Territories	0.2	—	12	6.0	—	—	—	—	—
Abroad	—	—	147	—	—	—	—	—	—
Totals	177.6	—	44,500	25.1	—	76	24	48	618

Cooperating Attorneys Needed

As the chart makes obvious, the Union has far too few cooperating attorneys in Northern New England, in the South generally, in most of the Plains and Mountain states, and in Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico. ACLU members in these sections of the country who are lawyers and who would like to be added to the list should communicate with Staff Counsel Rowland Watts. While cooperating attorneys receive no fees, the Union does try to cover their out-of-pocket expenses, and they are asked to work on cases and legal problems only after they have agreed to do so in each particular situation.

Atlanta Court Finds Wilkinson Guilty; ACLU Set for Appeal of HUAC Test Case

Civil Rts.

Another ACLU-backed test case challenging the constitutionality of the House Un-American Activities Committee is now moving through the courts.

A Federal District Court jury in Atlanta on January 23 found Frank Wilkinson guilty of contempt of Congress last summer when he refused, on First Amendment grounds, to answer the Committee's questions concerning alleged Communist associations. The Committee was investigating what it considered subversive influences at work in the South's controversy over desegregation.

The Union is providing Wilkinson, whose home is in Los Angeles, with the services of its Staff Counsel Rowland Watts because of its belief that the case offers another opportunity to bring before the U.S. Supreme Court the constitutionality of the HUAC mandate. Since the Committee was first created in 1938, the ACLU has opposed its mandate to investigate "un-American propaganda activities" as an invasion of First Amendment freedoms.

Federal Judge Boyd Sloan sentenced Wilkinson to twelve months in prison, the maximum sentence, but did not impose any fine, and declared that the HUAC was clearly authorized by the House to carry out its activities and that the Atlanta hearings were an investigation for a valid legislative purpose. He concluded that a moderate prison sentence would not be a sufficient deterrent to other persons refusing to cooperate with the Committee.

Staff Counsel Rowland Watts moved for a new trial immediately after the sentence was imposed on the ground that the trial court had erred in denying his previous motions for acquittal. Watts argued, as he had during the trial, that the HUAC mandate was unconstitutional and therefore Wilkinson's refusal to cooperate did not constitute an offense against the United States.

Judge Sloan did agree with Watts' suggestion that the court reserve decision on the new trial motion until the U.S. Supreme Court had ruled in the Barenblatt case, and released Wilkinson on $1,000 bond. The Barenblatt case, which raises questions involved in the Wilkinson case, was argued by ACLU attorneys before the Supreme Court last fall. If Wilkinson is denied a new trial after the Barenblatt decision comes down, the Union will take his case to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Civil Liberties
3/59

Civil Liberties, 1959

CHATTANOOGA TIMES

The Shifty Line 4/4/59

The House Committee on Un-American Activities has detected a substantial shift in the Communist party line regarding the nation's Negro population. Cecil Sherrill

Nearly 40 years ago the idea of a "black republic" was advanced as a party aim for the South with its heavy Negro concentrations. The fantastic scheme—which we suspect the party theorists never had any intention of trying, much less realizing—has been cited time and again by extremists as a reason to continue, even to strengthen, racial discriminations. To do anything else, they said, would be to "follow the Communist line."

Now, the House committee says, the Reds are aligning themselves with the aspirations of patriotic Negroes for a surer measure of legally granted, constitutionally guaranteed benefits of American life. To the Negroes' great credit, let it be said there has been an overwhelming rejection of the party and its leadership. Only a tiny few of the race are numbered among defectors to the Communist side.

The present line, of course, is a far different thing from promising the Negro a republic of his own. But the point is that in neither case were the Communists motivated by any real concern for the Negro's welfare; in both, they moved to foment and to deepen differences existing between Americans. For them, it is a matter of tactics.

The Communists' strategy is to advance the party's aim of world domination by subverting America and causing its submission to Russia. It is unchanging, but they have failed miserably in bringing it about.

Their tactics, which may shift overnight, include stirring up strife wherever they can in the hope of destroying America's capacity to contain diversity of thought and belief and action within the unity of a fundamental purpose.

It will never serve America's best interest, or that of its many peoples, to oppose any given course just because it happens to coincide right then with the Communist party line. Automatic rejection of something the Reds profess to espouse places the initiative in their hands; they have simply to say they are for something to have us turn against it.

Better by far for us, as Americans with blessed protection for making up our own minds, to set our course and plan our actions on the basis of what we believe to be right, and doing it, without the slightest regard of what the Communists' shifting—and shifty—tactics may be at the moment.

Cecil Sherrill - 1959

Reds Now Travel on Their Subversive Errands—by Supreme Court Decree!

During the convention of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union in February, Dictator Khrushchev flung insults and threats at the United States. Marshal Malinovsky, the war minister, also threatened the United States, bragging that the Kremlin's missiles can strike "precisely any point" in this country.

At that same convention in Moscow, was an American citizen who himself made a lying, anti-American speech. He was James E. Jackson, representing the Communist Party of the United States.

How did Jackson get there? He got there openly and legally. And so did other U. S. Communist leaders who went to Moscow at the same time. These characters were present because the Supreme Court ruled last June that the Secretary of State had no right to withhold passports from members of the Communist Party.

Jackson had been convicted by a jury in a Federal court as a conspirator against the United States. But last August the Court of Appeals reversed the conviction, on the ground that the Supreme Court in a similar case had freed several convicted California Red leaders. Thus Jackson was saved from prison.

Meanwhile, the Supreme Court had issued its decision that Communists must not be denied passports. President Eisenhower quickly sent a special message to Congress, urging legislation authorizing the Secretary of State to withhold passports from supporters of Communism. The bill was passed in the House, but when it came to the Senate it got tied up in the jam of legislation just before adjournment. So the Communist Party was free to send Jackson to represent it at the convention of the Soviet Communist Party.

Also present in Moscow was the best-known member of the C.P.-U.S.A., Paul Robeson. He, too, had received a passport after the Supreme Court's decision. And who should show up in Moscow, almost immediately after Jackson, but Harry Bridges, president of the Communist-controlled International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union? Years ago a split decision of the Supreme Court saved this Australian-born citizen from deportation.

A few days earlier, Khrushchev received Dr. W. E. B. Du Bois, ninety-one-year-old scholar, former professor and intellectual leader of the pro-Kremlin forces among Negroes in the United States. Both Du Bois and his wife were identified long ago as members of the Communist Party. Although not a member now, he makes no secret of his devotion to the Soviet regime. For years his efforts to get a passport failed. Then came the Supreme Court decision—and Du Bois was free to go to Moscow. From Moscow, Du Bois and his wife flew to Peking, defying the State Department regulation that United States passports are not valid for travel to Red China.

Another United States citizen in Moscow was George Morris, labor editor of the Communist Party's misnamed paper, The Worker, and member of the C.P.'s Labor Commission. After months of delay, the State Department had unwillingly given him a passport.

Meanwhile, Dr. Alpheus Hunton, another identified Communist Party member, had gone to Africa. Hunton used to be director of the Council on African Affairs, which Attorney General Brownell called a Communist front.

The State Department has been forced to grant passports to scores of important Communists and fellow-travelers. The department even felt obliged to give passports to a precious pair one of whom on a previous trip abroad made speeches charging the United States with germ warfare! Who can check on what harm such people do to the United States abroad? Congress should adopt the bill which President Eisenhower urged last summer, unmistakably authorizing the State Department to deny passports to Communists and their "willing instruments," and to cancel every passport now in such hands.

Civil Liberties - 4/4/59
The Saturday Evening Post

1959 - Civil Liberties

Birmingham Leader

Civil Liberties,

Shuttlesworth To Address Rights Rally In Louisville

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, famed leader of the Birmingham freedom fight, will speak here May 22 at a rally for civil rights and civil liberties.

He will appear at West Chestnut Street Baptist Church under auspices of a committee of leading citizens. The meeting will be coordinated by the Southern Conference Shuttlesworth Fund, of which Mr. Shuttlesworth is a board member.

Co-chairman for the rally are Dr. M. M. D. Perdue, pastor of Emanuel Baptist Church and publice relations chairman of the Baptist Ministers And Deacons Meeting of Louisville and Vicinity; the Rt. Rev. C. Ewbank Tucker, dishop of the AME Zion Church, and Dr. Daniel J. Hughlett, executive secretary of the Jefferson County Sunday School Association

DR. PERDUE

Dr. Perdue said that one purpose of the rally will be to stimulate work for civil rights and civil liberties in Louisville. Another aim will be to rally support for the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, of which Mr. Shuttlesworth is president.

The ACMHR is sponsoring a bus protest and other civil-rights actions in Birmingham. Mr. Shuttlesworth himself is under sentence for his part in the movement, and recently the Rev. Calvin Woods was sentenced to six months in jail for urging his congregation to stay off segregated buses. Both are appealing to the higher courts.

REV. F. L. SHUTTLESWORTH

Mr. Shuttlesworth will stress the vital link between civil rights and civil liberties. He said recently in his column in The Pittsburgh Courier: "If the state can dictate to Negro preachers what to say and what not to say, when to do and when not to do, how to act and when to act, then Americanism has become far less than that which the Founding Fathers established, and what we have for so long proclaimed."

The Birmingham leader said he also wants to arouse support for white persons who come under attack in the South for taking a stand for integration and equal rights for all citizens. Dr. Perdue noted that the Southern Conference Educational Fund has long supported white and Negro citizens working for integration whose patriotic motives have been impugned by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

OTHER MEMBERS

Other members of the committee sponsoring Mr. Shuttlesworth's visit to Louisville include Frank L. Stanley, publisher of The Louisville Defender; the Rev. Charles N. King, editor of The American Baptist; the Rev. W. J. Hodge, president of the Louisville branch of NAACP; Dr. Katharine Dodd, Distinguished Professor of Pediatrics at the University of Louisville School of Medicine; the Rev. R. J. Miller, pastor of First Virginia Avenue Baptist Church; Neville Tucker, attorney and leader in the NAACP Youth Council; the Rev. G. K. Offutt, pastor of West Chestnut Street Baptist Church; the Rev. J. V. Bottoms, pastor of Green Street Baptist Church, and Anne and Carl Braden, field secretaries and editors for the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

Additional members of the committee will be announced later.

Civil Liberties 1959

FLORIDA CLU, UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS SCORE STATE PROBE AT UNIVERSITY

The Florida Civil Liberties Union and other groups, noting serious violations of civil liberties, have protested a state legislative committee's investigation of alleged homosexuality at the University of Florida. The probe was conducted by Senator Charlie Johns.

A detailed criticism of the investigation was contained in a letter sent by the Florida chapter of the American Association of University Professors to its members. "Faculty members have been called on the telephone, or issued personal summonses by a member of the university police force to 'appear before the Johns Committee, and have been given no inkling of the reason for the summons or why they are asked to appear," the letter said. "Further, they may not be informed either by the police or the investigators of their legal and constitutional rights, including the right to counsel, or that their coming without being subpoenaed is purely voluntary. The ...committee has conducted interrogation in a suite of rooms at a local motel or hotel. After the individual has been questioned by one of the investigators...he is directed into another room...where he faces a group of interrogators with a tape recorder or court reporter, or both. He may be placed under oath for a portion of the interrogation."

The Florida Civil Liberties Union's protest, made by Stuart Simon, chairman of the FCLU Legislative Committee, stated that: (1) the investigation would result in "permanent damage to the reputation of human beings" if it continued to attract newspaper attention; (2) the university officials are better equipped to conduct such an inquiry; (3) "the committee investigation...constitutes a legislative usurpation of a judicial function" inasmuch as the laws of Florida "render various types of lewd and homosexual behavior subject to criminal penalties; and (4) legislative investigations all too often violate the basic concepts of individual human rights set forth in the Bill of Rights and our federal constitution."

The inquiry also has come under sharp attack in the press. In an editorial The Daytona Beach, Florida News decried the conduct of the Johns Committee. It is "serving as a roving Grand Jury," the editorial declared, "with political power....It has just completed its indictment of the U. of Fla., but not as would an ordinary Grand Jury. The indictment will not be turned over to a court of law where the facts it alleges may be proved in a judicial manner with conviction or exoneration the just result. Instead the Johns 'Grand Jury' already has indicted the university." The editorial backed the FCLU letter of protest to Sen. Johns and after noting that a chapter might be organized on the campus said that "it would seem...the university is very much in need of a protector of civil liberties."

As to why the Johns Committee focussed its attention on alleged homosexuality (its original mandate authorized it to look into "conduct inimical to our country"), it has been suggested that intimidation of the faculty and student body would serve as a deterrent against racial integration on the campus or a university chapter of the FCLU. Under a Federal court order, the first Negro is now attending the state university's law school.

Civil Liberties

Feature Press Service
4/20/59

Civil Liberties
1959

Negro Red Spars Angrily With Probers

ARKANSAS GAZETTE
APR 23 1959

Carol Sebesta

Washington, April 22 (UPI).—A Negro Communist leader told House investigators today that they should be investigating the "murder of Negroes in the South" instead of "prying" into his politics.

William Lorenzo Patterson of New York, general manager of the Communist Sunday Worker, clashed angrily with members of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Committee Chairman Francis E. Walter (Dem., Pa.) told Patterson it was "to the everlasting credit of the colored people in the United States" that they were not deceived by Patterson's writings about civil rights strife.

Patterson snapped that he did not like Walter's "gratuitous insults." Angrily he told Walter that the "murder" and "denial of civil rights" to Negroes in the South were "directed by men like yourself."

"We don't care about that," Walter retorted. "You've shed enough crocodile tears this morning."

Patterson was summoned to testify on a bill to give to the State Department more discretion in withholding passports for travel abroad. The measure was prompted by a Supreme Court ruling that the Department could not refuse to issue a passport solely because of a citizen's political associations.

Challenges Group

Patterson challenged the authority of the Committee to hold such hearings and said any legislation that resulted would violate the "constitutional right to travel."

Patterson, who has been associated with Communist organizations at least 30 years, even refused to tell the Committee whether he had ever been a Communist.

"You have no right to ask such a question," he said. Ordered to answer, he declined again, contending that the Constitution guaranteed to him the right to hold whatever political beliefs he chose.

Canada Incident

The Committee brought out that Patterson was deported from Canada in 1948 on the ground that he was seeking to overthrow the Canadian government by force and violence.

Patterson said he went to Toronto [illegible] to address a meeting. He said the Canadians deported him "under pressure from the United States State Department."

"You aren't creating the impression the State Department was fighting to bring you back here?" Walter asked.

"Very funny," Patterson replied.

Carol Sebesta 1959

PASSPORT WITNESS BALKS AT INQUIRY

Carl Sibertes

Manager of The Worker Cites High Court's Edict on Communist Links

APR 23 1953

By C. P. TRUSSELL

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 22—A witness who had his passport seized by the State Department and had been deported from Canada on political behavior grounds was found today to have a new passport ready for use.

The witness, William L. Patterson of Brooklyn, challenged the authority of the House Un-American Activity Committee to ask him whether his numerous trips abroad were Communist missions.

Mr. Patterson, in effect, invoked a ruling of the Supreme Court of last summer to protect him from answering such questions. In applying for his new passport, the witness said, he had grossed out the questions concerning communism.

Court Barred Questions

On previous granting of passports to Mr. Patterson, the application blanks did not require "yyeys" or "no" answers as to Communist affiliation. Such questions were inserted in the Internal Security Act of 1950, but were nullified by the court decision of last June.

The committee is seeking to write a new law to deny passports to those whose foreign visits might be detrimental to the security of the United States.

Mr. Patterson declined to answer questions dealing with communism. He said, though, that the committee already knew about his affiliations.

Mr. Patterson is manager of what is left of The Daily Worker, the official American news organization of the Communist party. It now publishes only on Sundays.

Travels, on passports starting in 1927, took him throughout Europe and into the Soviet Union and satellite countries. News dispatches, cited by Richard Arens, committee staff director, indicated that he had called the United States "a criminal country." Mr. Patterson denied this. What he meant, he said, was to assert that some Southern states were practicing "Negro genocide" under Jim Crow laws.

Clashes With Walter

Mr. Patterson had several clashes with Representative Francis E. Walter, Pennsylvania Democrat who heads the committee. Mr. Walter, at one point, observed:

"To the everlasting credit of the Negro people and their leaders, they are not misled by this stuff." Mr. Patterson, a Negro, said he was speaking for American Negroes during his foreign trips.

"Stop speaking for the Negroes of the United States," Mr. Walter interposed. "You don't speak for anyone but yourself."

The State Department said Mr. Patterson's passport was canceled as a result of his going beyond the countries mentioned in his application to visit Communist Hungary.

Mr. Patterson's attorney, Abraham Unger of New York, was one of scores of lawyers listed by the committee in a recent pamphlet, "Communist Legal Subversion; the Role of the Communist Lawyer."

Carl Sibertes, 1959

THE WASHINGTON POST and TIMES HERALD
A10 Thursday, April 23, 1959

N. Y. Red Rows With House Unit

Civil Liberties

Associated Press Photo

William L. Patterson, at left, general manager of the Communist Party publication. "The Sunday Worker," confers with his attorney, Abraham Unger of New York, before testifying on passport legislation at the Capitol yesterday.

By Norman C. Cornish
United Press International

A Negro Communist leader told House investigators yesterday that they should be investigating the "murder of Negroes in the South" instead of prying into his politics.

The Negro, William Lorenzo Patterson of New York, general manager of the Communist Sunday Worker, clashed angrily with members of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Committee Chairman Francis E. Walter (D-Pa.) told Patterson it was "to the everlasting credit of the colored people in the United States" that they were not "deceived" by Patterson's writings about civil rights strife.

Patterson snapped that he did not like Walter's "gratuitous insults." He angrily told Walter that the "murder" and "denial of civil rights" to Negroes in the South were "directed by men like yourself."

Patterson was summoned to testify on a bill to give the State Department more discretion in withholding passports for travel abroad. The measure was prompted by a Supreme Court ruling that the Department cannot deny a citizen a passport solely because of his political associations.

Patterson challenged the authority of the group to hold such hearings and said any legislation that might result would violate the "constitutional right to travel."

Patterson, who has been associated with Communist organizations for at least 30 years, even refused to tell the Committee whether he had ever been a Red.

"You have no right to ask such a question," he said.

Patterson's passport once was revoked because he traveled to Hungary in 1950 without State Department permission.

Committee Council Richard Arens produced a United Press dispatch quoting Patterson as telling a news conference in Prague that the United States was "a criminal Government" on the question of civil rights. He was asked if he ever made such a statement.

"The United Press has distorted and continues to distort statements by Negroes," he said. He said he did not recall making the statement.

The Committee brought out that Patterson was deported from Canada in 1948 on the ground that he was seeking to overthrow the Canadian government by force and violence.

Patterson said he went to Toronto merely to address a mass meeting. He said the Canadians deported him "under pressure" from the U. S. State Department.

"You aren't creating the impression the State Department was fighting to bring you back here?" Walter asked.

"Very funny," Patterson snorted.

Civil Liberties - 1959

The Bar's Black Cloud

The House of Representatives has passed a bill which may be an ominous portent of a fresh attack on civil liberties and the independence of the Supreme Court. The bill itself is relatively tame: it redefines the word "organize" as used in the Smith Act in a way that widens the application of that controversial measure. But the real significance of the House bill is that:

- It was introduced by Representative Francis Walter, chairman of the shabby Un-American Activities Committee.
- It was passed unanimously.
- The vote in the House was taken just a few days after the influential American Bar Association called upon Congress to set aside Supreme Court decisions in important areas of civil liberties, and praised and encouraged the Un-American Activities Committee and the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

Less than a year ago, the board of governors of the ABA denounced the omnibus Jenner-Butler bill designed to limit drastically the jurisdiction of the court over security legislation. This action was one factor in the defeat of the bill in the Senate by one vote. The Association has now reiterated its position against wholesale limitations on the authority and independence of the judiciary, but by criticizing specific court decisions, recommending legislation that would strengthen so-called "security" measures, and giving verbal aid and comfort to Congressional enemies of the court, the powerful and influential Bar Association has created a black, anti-court cloud which might well open the flood gates to intemperate piece-meal legislation that could undermine the court's defense of the Bill of Rights as effectively as a broadside attack.

The Bar Association urged Congress to 1) amend the Smith Act to make it a crime merely to advocate overthrow of the government by force; 2) to let the states enact their own sedition laws; 3) to give the Secretary of State broader powers to restrict travel; 4) to apply the federal employe security program to non-sensitive as well as sensitive positions; 5) to require a federal employe to forfeit his rights under the Fifth Amendment as a condition of employment —all actions clearly aimed at nullifying recent Court decisions. The climate in which these recommendations were approved was betrayed by the Association's praise of the House and Senate subversion committees, without even a hint that they might have exceeded their authority, engaged in persecution, or even committed a damaging or foolish act.

The Association's attack is all the more reprehensible because when American liberties were being seriously undermined by McCarthy and his followers, the leaders of the Bar Association were alternately silent and evasive. Furthermore, this attack comes at a time when the Communist Party is at its lowest ebb in three decades, with membership reduced to considerably fewer than 5,000. The Bar Association "has done the Communists a favor," commented Edward P. Morgan, "by holding up to hostility and ridicule the one branch of the U.S. government that has done most to protect the democratic structure. It is the eloquently depressing height of irony that the exalted peak of the judiciary should be thus attacked in the name of the legal profession."

Silver Lining

If there is anything resembling a silver lining in the action of the Bar Association, it comes under the heading of "it might have been worse." The American Bar Association is tightly run by a conservative hierarchy with hardly a vestige of democratic procedure. Fewer than half the practicing lawyers in the country are included in its membership. The original document from which the Association's final recommendations were drawn was a rambling, vitriolic report presented to the delegates for approval by the Committee on Communist Tactics, Strategy, and Objectives, headed by a reactionary former member of the Subversive Activities Control Board. In its original language the report, among other things, petulantly criticized the Court's defense of the Bill of Rights as "invoking technicalities."

But a spirited fight against language that so cavalierly dismissed fundamental Constitutional civil liberties as mere "technicalities," and against many of the more extreme aspects of the report developed among the delegates, led by Albert E. Jenner, Jr., whose only apparent resemblance to the former court-busting Senator is membership in the same political party. Few of the objectionable recommendations of the committee report were actually eliminated, but the language was toned down considerably, and the report supporting the formal recommendations was never actually endorsed verbatim by the delegates.

Another hopeful note was sounded by the Association in its choice for president-elect—Whitney North Seymour of New York, a bar leader identified favorably with civil liberties who would not have had a chance to win office a few years ago.

Yet in spite of these encouraging developments, it is still true that the principal voice of the American bar has tarnished its record with an unwarranted criticism of the Supreme Court, coupled with warm commendation of the Court's most severe Congressional critics.

Civil Liberties
The Progressive

Civil Liberties 1959

Academic Freedom - A Case Study

Academic Freedom is not an "academic isue" which can be discussed at leisure and in lofty isolation from the immediate challenges to freedom of information. The proliferation of closed sessions—especially closed sessions arriving at unexplained decisions—whether in Washington or on campus threatens educational freedom whatever the intentions of those withholding information Certainly "open decisions openly arrived at" are not always desireable or even possible but the burden of proof should rest on those who would curtail the free flow of information, not on those who would further it.

The Post Office Department's new regulations concerning "foreign political propaganda" raise the issue of curtailing access to information. Few would argue that materials describing the World Festival of Youth and Students were anything other than political propaganda. One might, however, wonder whether an announcement of an international student chess festival co-sponsored by the International Chess Federation to which all national chess federations belong and the Communist-dominated International Union of Students was more political or propagandistic than French descriptions of the Algerian war or Dominican explanations of the Trujillo government's policies.

However, the basic questions relate to not what mail is branded foreign political propaganda but whether any mail should be so branded. Should the Post Office Department set itself up as a judge over what unsolicited mailings should be delivered normally and which only on request? Should the government demand that those receiving any type of mail sign their names and commit themselves to a definite interest in it, merely to receive materials addressed to them? Should mail be labeled "political propaganda" and, by implication at least, factual matter, by the Post Office Department? National Student News

The Post Office Department's case does not seem impressive. Surely 15,000,000 pieces of mail pose no grave technical problems of delivery. Satisfactory reasons for wanting the names of all individuals receiving "foreign political propaganda" have not been advanced if the collection of names is an objective rather than a deterrent to the receipt of mail.

It is hard to avoid the conclusion that the basic reason for the ruling is a distrust of the critical faculties of recipients. This profound distrust of the average citizen's ability to evaluate what he reads seems to us not only ill-founded but frightening. We cannot believe that insulating the citizens and especially the editors and local organizational leader of a democracy from ideas, whether expressed with scientific exactitude or in the form of "foreign political propaganda," is a sound policy. With James Madison we hold that popular government and a free society require that the individual not be deterred from securing information and opinions from may points of view.

—REGINALD H. GREEN

4/59 Civil Lib.

Civil Lib. - 1959

File Clips Civil Lib.

RACIAL INTEGRATION AND ACADEMIC FREEDOM

PART I

A STUDY BY THE ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS MEMORIAL FUND, SCHOOL OF LAW, NEW YORK UNIVERSITY*

This is the first published research of the Arthur Garfield Hays Memorial Fund, Donald H. Wollett, Director, established at the School of Law, New York University, in September of 1958.

The ambition of the Fund is to pursue what may be called "middle distance" research, that is, the examination of matters which have potential utility to persons and groups interested in advancing and protecting civil liberties without being tied to actual or pending litigation. This initial study investigates judicial procedures and affirmative remedies which are available to persons who seek to challenge the constitutionality of state legislation which restricts, in varying ways and degrees, the freedom of public employees, including school teachers, to espouse, or to belong to organizations that espouse, racial integration.

I

INTRODUCTION

Examination of the statutes of the states discloses that six of them, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia, have enacted legislation relating to public employees' advocacy of integration and membership by such persons in organizations which support that position. (See Appendix.)

Only Louisiana has directly prohibited its school teachers (and in Orleans Parish, other public employees) from advocating or in any manner performing any act towards bringing about integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of

* The current study has been prepared by Edward Douglas Lanford, the Arthur Garfield Hays Graduate Research Fellow, and Jordan Derwin and Kenneth Martin Greenfield, the two Arthur Garfield Hays Senior Research Fellows, under the supervision of Professor Donald H. Wollett, Director, Arthur Garfield Hays Memorial Fund and Professor of Law, New York University School of Law. The bulk of the work dealing with the constitutionality of the Louisiana legislation was done by Mr. Lanford. However, the introductory remarks are the responsibility of Professor Wollett.

The sections dealing with both state and federal judicial procedures and remedies, which will be published in the May issue of the New York University Law Review, is a composite of the work of the three men. The material dealing with federal judicial procedures and remedies was written by Professor Wollett, with the assistance of Mr. Greenfield and Mr. Derwin and two students in the seminar on Constitutional limitations, Miles R. Jacobson and Lewis Stein.

New York University Law Review
Vol. 34, No. 4 - April, 1959

learning. The other state statutes restrict freedom of speech and association in less direct and more subtle ways, primarily by the device of requiring only the disclosure of organizational memberships, either by the group or by the public employee. The statutes in those states do not indicate, at least on their face, that any penalty will be visited upon the person whose particular affiliations are revealed.

Since the Louisiana statute raises the sharpest questions, and has had an identifiable impact on the school teachers of the jurisdiction,[1] this study has been conducted in the context of that legislation.[2] While it may seem inordinately restrictive to limit the analysis to one statute of one state, what has happened and will happen in Louisiana has transcendent interest in at least three ways.

First, if Louisiana can inhibit the freedom of teachers to explain the decisions in the basic integration cases and their implications, other states may be encouraged to do likewise and thereby impede their ultimate acceptance by the evolutionary process of education.[3] Second, the Louisiana statute is a useful vehicle for reexamination of the dimensions of legislative power to restrict the freedom of speech and association of public employees. It is reasonable to suppose that the restraints that were first imposed on the "privilege" of public employment as a result of concern with the dangers of subversion and are now being imposed, sectionally, in opposition to the termination of racial segregation will arise in other contexts. Finally, statutes that invade first amendment freedoms pose difficult and troublesome procedural questions that can best be explored narrowly.

One can frequently look at a given statute that on its face regulates speech and association and conclude that its mere existence operates as an incursion on the exercise of first amendment freedoms. A single-minded concern with civil liberties might lead one to urge loose standards for determining issues of standing and ripeness and to argue that members of the regulated group should be permitted to

---

[1] A Louisiana college recently provided its faculty with copies of the legislation. The faculty was also advised that the legislature was planning an investigation relative to possible violations of the statute. Such knowledge prompted an inquiry to the American Civil Liberties Union to determine whether or not explanation of recent court decisions adverse to segregation and suggestion that the decision be accepted would be such a violation.

[2] Many of the important questions raised by the statutes of Arkansas, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia should be settled if and when the Supreme Court of the United States decides the case of NAACP v. Patty, 159 F. Supp. 503 (E.D. Va.), prob. juris. noted sub nom. Harrison v. NAACP, 358 U.S. 807 (1958), which involves the constitutionality of several parts of the Virginia legislative package.

[3] According to N.Y. Times, Feb. 26, 1959, p. 63, col. 5, Arkansas has gone Louisiana one better and prohibited any state governmental agency from hiring a member of the NAACP.

attack such a statute without first engaging in conduct that might run afoul of its proscriptions and thereby subject them to its sanctions. The ideal procedure, from this point of view, would be to permit selected plaintiffs to bring a class action on behalf of all persons similarly situated, alleging that they have been, or are, deterred from speaking in particular ways, or from joining or remaining members of particular organizations, or from supporting particular causes, by fear of the statute's broad interdiction and of punishment under its vague standards. Such plaintiffs would insist that they have thereby been deprived, merely by the statute's enactment, of their freedom of speech, freedom of association, liberty and property without due process of law, and that they are therefore entitled to a declaratory judgment that the statute is unconstitutional on its face and an injunction restraining the defendants from enforcing it against them and all other members of the class.

There are, however, countervailing considerations that strongly militate against permitting this procedure. In the first place, the propriety of class actions to protect first amendment freedoms is subject to grave doubt on the ground that such freedoms do not accrue in a judicially enforceable way to amorphous groups. They are personal and individual, not collective, in nature. A may be deterred by a statute from exercising his freedom of speech, while B may not be, at least in any identifiable way. In addition, an action for a declaratory judgment that a statute is invalid on its face is in effect a request that the court review in broadest terms the particular work of the legislature at issue and excise it from the session laws. The dangers of determinations of such abstract issues, unilluminated by specificity of pleading and proof, are obvious. What, for example, are the res judicata and stare decisis effects of such decisions? Moreover, is not the performance of such a function by a court essentially oligarchic in nature and does it not do violence to orderly three-departmental government? What happens, for example, to the presumption of constitutionality? Finally, when a court reviews the constitutionality of legislative action outside the particularized context of a case or controversy, does it not encourage preoccupation of the body politic with the courts as the exclusive guardians of human liberty? And does not such preoccupation corrupt the legislature's sense of responsibility for the constitutionality of the action it takes and the electorate's sense of responsibility for the legislators it chooses?

The kind of balance that should be struck between these opposing considerations can be examined most intelligently and meaningfully in the context of a specific problem, e.g., the Louisiana statute at issue.

This study discusses the constitutionality of the Louisiana legislation both as a matter of state and federal law. However, pursuant to the implementation of our principal objective, it focuses heavily upon the question of what judicial procedures and affirmative remedies are available, both at state and federal levels, to the person who claims that his civil liberties have been abridged by the governmental action in question.

Since there is some tendency to think of issues of constitutionality in exclusively federal terms and to look largely to the federal courts as the guardians of human freedom, it may seem strange to some that we have devoted such a large part of the study to the examination of state constitutional law and state judicial procedures and remedies. However, the importance of state constitutions in protecting civil liberties and the historic role of the state courts in safeguarding both state and federal constitutional rights should not be overlooked.[4] The assumption of responsibility by the states is enormously important to the survival of a responsively democratic society, and the notion that their courts are not to be trusted with the difficult and delicate task of distinguishing between constitutional and unconstitutional governmental action is not only ill-founded but also dangerous. Indeed, it may well be that state courts, particularly in connection with issues that are charged with emotion and which threaten entrenched social institutions and patterns of behavior, are the most effective judicial instruments for protecting human liberties without precipitating divisive interregional conflicts.[5]

II

Louisiana Legislation

At the Regular Session of 1956 the advocates of segregation obtained the adoption (without a dissenting vote) of thirteen legislative acts designed to maintain forced separation of the races in a variety

---

[4] The lower federal courts did not have general jurisdiction, in private civil litigation, over cases arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States until 1875. "[T]he principle established by the first Judiciary Act was that private litigants must look to the state tribunals in the first instance for vindication of federal claims, subject to limited review by the United States Supreme Court. In the course of time, exceptions were made in the case of matters of a peculiarly federal nature or where political exigencies demanded. But it was not until the consolidation of national sentiment after the Civil War that the basic change was made whereby the national courts became the primary forum for the vindication of federal rights." Hart & Wechsler, The Federal Courts and the Federal System 727 (1953).

[5] This statement is not meant to imply that courts, whether state or federal, are the best instruments for safeguarding human freedoms against improper executive or legislative behavior. Plainly they often are not.

of contexts.[6] Seven of these acts related to education.[7] Four concerned public parks and recreational facilities,[8] waiting rooms for passengers in interstate commerce,[9] employer-furnished sanitation, eating and drinking facilities for employees,[10] dances, social functions, entertainments, and athletic events.[11] Two proposed to amend the constitution.[12]

As part of the continuing campaign against integration, the legislature, at the Regular Session of 1958, adopted twelve acts covering six areas of racial segregation.[13] Five of these statutes were calculated to avoid mixing of the races in the public schools. Act 256 provided for the closing and sale of integrated schools. Acts 257, 258, and 557 were designed to establish a system of publicly financed private education, and Act 259 was a pupil assignment law,[14] almost a verbatim copy of the Alabama statute[15] which the Supreme Court of the United States recently declared to be valid on its face.[16]

The subject of this study is Act 249 of the 1956 legislation, which amended the statutory grounds for dismissal of a permanent teacher.[17] Act 249 added, as grounds for dismissal,

---

[6] For a discussion of these acts, see Reynard, Legislation Affecting Segregation, 17 La. L. Rev. 101 (1956).

[7] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:221 (Supp. 1958) [Act 28] (excepts integrated schools from compulsory attendance statute); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 17:341-46 (Supp. 1958) [Act 319] (segregation of public schools); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 17:341-46 (Supp. 1958) [Act 249] (restrictions upon public school teachers' taking active role in integration); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:493 (Supp. 1958) [Act 248] (similar restrictions upon public school bus operators); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:462 (Supp. 1958) [Act 252] (restrictions on teachers); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:523 (Supp. 1958) [Act 250] (similar restrictions upon public employees other than teachers in Orleans Parish); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 17:2131-35 (Supp. 1958) [Act 15] (requirement of certificate of "eligibility and good moral character," signed by high school superintendent and principal, for admission to institute of higher learning).

[8] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 33:4558.1 (Supp. 1958) [Act 14].

[9] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 45:1301-05 (Supp. 1958) [Act 27].

[10] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 23:971-75 (Supp. 1958) [Act 395].

[11] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 4:451-55 (Supp. 1958) [Act 579].

[12] Amendments proposed by Acts 606 & 613 were adopted at the November 1956 elections. La. Const. art. XII, § 1 (as amended 1958).

[13] La. Acts Reg. Sess. 1958, Nos. 187, 256-62, 482-83, 519, 557.

[14] For a discussion of these acts, see Reynard, Segregation, 19 La. L. Rev. 114 (1958).

[15] Ala. Acts 1957, No. 367.

[16] Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham Board of Educ., 358 U.S. 101 (1958) (per curiam), adopting opinion in 164 F. Supp. 372 (N.D. Ala. 1958).

[17] As amended, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:443 (Supp. 1958) [Act 249] now reads:

Removal of teachers; procedure; right to appeal.

A permanent teacher shall not be removed from office except upon written and signed charges of willful neglect of duty, or incompetency or dishonesty, or of being a member of or of contributing to any group, organization, movement or corporation that is by law or injunction prohibited from operating in the state of Louisiana, or of advocating or in any manner performing any act toward bringing about integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of higher learning of the state of Louisiana, and then only if found guilty after a hearing by the school > being a member of or . . . contributing to any group organization, movement or corporation that is by law or injunction prohibited from operating in the state of Louisiana, or . . . advocating or in any manner performing any act toward bringing about integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of higher learning of the state of Louisiana . . . .[18]

These same grounds for dismissal were made applicable to permanent teachers of the Orleans Parish;[19] regular or permanent employees, other than teachers, in the Orleans Parish;[20] and permanent school bus operators.[21]

A companion act was declared unconstitutional in the case of Ludley v. Board of Supervisors of La. State Univ.[22] That act required as a prerequisite for entrance into any publicly financed institution of higher learning, a certificate of eligibility and good moral character signed by the applicant's former principal and superintendent, addressed to the institution the applicant seeks to enter. Negro students sought a declaratory judgment and injunction testing the constitutionality of the act. It was declared unconstitutional by the federal district court on the ground that the intent of the legislature was to discriminate against Negro citizens and to circumvent the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment. The Fifth Circuit, af-board of the parish or city, as the case may be, which hearing may be private or public, at the option of the teacher. At least fifteen days in advance of the date of the hearing, the school board shall furnish the teacher with a copy of the written charges. The teacher shall have the right to appear before the board with witnesses in his behalf and with counsel of his selection, all of whom shall be heard by the board at the said hearing. Nothing herein contained shall impair the right of appeal to a court of competent jurisdiction.

If a permanent teacher is found guilty by a school board, after due and legal hearing as provided herein, on charges of willful neglect of duty, or of incompetency, or dishonesty, or of being a member of or of contributing to any group, organization, movement or corporation that is by law or injunction prohibited from operating in the state of Louisiana, or of advocating or in any manner performing any act toward bringing about integration of the races within the public school system of the state of Louisiana, and ordered removed from office, or disciplined by the board, the teacher may, not more than one year from the date of said finding, petition a court of competent jurisdiction for a full hearing to review the action of the school board, and the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm or reverse the action of the school board in the matter. If the finding of the school board is reversed by the court and the teacher is ordered reinstated and restored to duty, the teacher shall be entitled to full pay for any loss of time or salary he or she may have sustained by reason of the action of the said school board. (Emphasis supplied to provisions added by La. Acts, Reg. Sess. 1956, No. 249.)

[18] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:443 (Supp. 1958).

[19] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:462 (Supp. 1958).

[20] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:523 (Supp. 1958).

[21] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:493 (Supp. 1958).

[22] 150 F. Supp. 900 (E.D. La. 1957). Louisiana legislation and constitutional provisions requiring segregation of the races in public elementary and high schools of the state have also been declared unconstitutional. Bush v. Orleans Parish School Bd., 138 F. Supp. 336 (E.D. La. 1956).

firming, emphasized the lack of objective standards for determining eligibility for such a certificate and the fact that the implied standard was that of the race of the applicant.[23] It was stated by the district court that Act 249, subject of this study, was designed to prevent Negro students from obtaining the certificate. "[I]t was the intention of the Legislature that any teacher who signs a certificate for a Negro student to go to a white school will sacrifice his tenure."[24]

The practical affect of Act 249 is illustrated by the circuit court's quotation of a letter from a high school principal to a Negro student seeking a certificate addressed to Louisiana State University:

> Miss Arnease Ludley
> 208 West McKinley Street
> Baton Rouge, Louisiana
>
> Dear Miss Ludley:
>
> Your request for a Certificate of Eligibility to attend Louisiana State University is hereby acknowledged. In reply I do not have a form of the Certificate of Eligibility addressed to that institution. If you should get a form and send it to me, I could not sign it, because under a state law I would lose my job for signing the certificate.
>
> I assure you that my refusal to sign the certificate is not intended to cast any unfavorable reflection against your character. I just can not take the risk of losing my job.
>
> Sincerely yours,
> (Signed) Arthur D. Smith
> Principal[25]

Although the Attorney General of Louisiana, counsel in the Ludley case, acknowledged that there might be some question as to the constitutionality of Act 249,[26] it has not yet been judicially tested.

III

Constitutionality as a Matter of State Law

Any attack upon the validity of Act 249 would undoubtedly be first met by the presumption of constitutionality that is given to all laws by the Supreme Court of Louisiana.[27] Although legislative "intent" to attain ends other than those revealed on the face of the statute has been used by at least one federal court to invalidate some of the [23] Board of Supervisors of La. State Univ. v. Ludley, 252 F.2d 372, 374 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 819 (1958).

---

[24] 150 F. Supp. at 903.

[25] 252 F.2d at 374.

[26] 150 F. Supp. at 902.

[27] See Ward v. Leche, 189 La. 113, 119, 179 So. 52, 54 (1938) (quoting with approval City of Shreveport v. Pedro, 170 La. 351, 127 So. 865 [1930]).

recent Louisiana legislation,[28] the state courts would probably rule out this line of attack by reliance upon the state supreme court's edict that they "have no right to review the policy or wisdom of legislation because our jurisdiction is confined to determining the applicability, legality or constitutionality of laws."[29] The presumption of constitutionality and probable inadmissibility of proof purporting to establish that the legislature had ulterior motives in passing Act 249 present formidable obstacles to a successful affirmative attack on the face of the statute. However, although the constitutionality of the legislation involved was upheld, Louisiana courts have been willing to judge the validity of state legislation on its face.[30]

Restraint of Freedom of Advocacy.—The Louisiana constitution provides for the free exercise of speech: "No law shall ever be passed to curtail or restrain the liberty of speech or of the press; any person may speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty."[31] The Supreme Court of Louisiana has evaluated this freedom:

> The right of freedom of speech and of the press as understood and enjoyed in this country today is one of the foundation stones upon which American liberty was built. It is the pillar without the support of which free governments fall and tyrannical dictatorships rise. Prior to the establishment of our democracy, no people on earth had ever been accorded the privilege of "speaking their mind" with that lack of restraint modern civilization's concept of freedom of expression connotes. . . . [T]he right to freely express one's sentiments through the medium of public communication is absolutely essential to the perpetuity of free government . . . .[32]

The Louisiana court has also stated, with regard to a conflict between an act of the legislature and a provision of the constitution, that all laws must yield to the constitution, as it is the paramount law.[33] The unqualified denial of "advocating . . . integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of higher learning of the state of Louisiana"[34] appears on its face to be clearly inconsistent with the freedom of speech guaranteed by the state constitution. However, there are difficulties with this conclusion.

---

[28] See Ludley v. Board of Supervisors of La. State Univ., 150 F. Supp. 900, 902-04 (E.D. La. 1957).

[29] Mouledoux v. Maestri, 197 La. 525, 535, 2 So. 2d 11, 14 (1941).

[30] E.g., City of New Orleans v. Borey, 52 So. 2d 728 (La. Ct. App. 1951); Ricks v. Department of State Civil Serv., 200 La. 341, 8 So. 2d 49 (1942).

[31] La. Const. art. I, § 3.

[32] Kennedy v. Item Co., 213 La. 347, 355, 34 So. 2d 886, 889 (1948) (dictum) (newspaper publisher found guilty of libel).

[33] Scott v. Ratcliff, 167 La. 237, 243, 119 So. 33, 35 (1928).

[34] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:443 (Supp. 1958), for text see note 17 supra.

The limitation of free speech in the context of a prohibition of political activity was one of the grounds upon which the constitutionality of the Louisiana civil service law was attacked in Ricks v. Department of State Civil Service.[35] A section of this law[36] forbade any employee in civil service to be a member of a committee of a political party or to make any political speech or public political statement as part of any political campaign. Violators were subject to fine and/or imprisonment, ineligibility for public employment for ten years, and loss of position if presently employed. Challenge of the law was also made on the basis of a denial of equal protection of the laws contrary to the fourteenth amendment because certain classes of persons were exempted from the operation of civil service. In declaring the civil service law constitutional against these claims, the court held that the privilege of holding public office is not guaranteed by the Constitution as an inalienable right. The privilege is conferred only upon such terms and conditions as the people, speaking through their chosen representatives, may determine.[37]

> The petitioner may have a constitutional right to talk politics, but he has no constitutional right to be a policeman. There are few employments for hire in which the servant does not agree to suspend his constitutional rights of free speech as well as idleness by the implied terms of his contract. The servant cannot complain, as he takes the employment on the terms which are offered him.[38]

It was held that the denial of free speech was within the legislative discretion to adopt such means as would effectuate the purpose of the civil service act and bring about a more perfect civil service system.[39]

It is arguable that the prohibition of advocacy of integration is calculated to bring about a more perfect functioning of the public school system. With regard to the tensions and emotions surrounding the question of integration, this denial could be viewed as a proper exercise of legislative discretion reasonably related to achieving an efficient operation of the schools. And, reasoning from the Ricks case, which upheld a prohibition of "political activity," perhaps advocacy of integration could today be classified as political activity of a sort.

However, although the court's holding in the Ricks case was clear regarding the "privilege" aspect of state employment, it recognized limitations upon that proposition. Such limitations could be utilized in holding the denial of "advocacy" to be unconstitutional. The court, in

---

[35] 200 La. 342, 8 So. 2d 49 (1942).

[36] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 42:727(J) (1950).

[37] 200 La. at 363, 8 So. 2d at 56.

[38] Id. at 371, 8 So. 2d at 59, quoting McAuliffe v. New Bedford, 155 Mass. 216, 29 N.E. 517 (1892).

[39] Id. at 371, 8 So. 2d at 59.

answering the claim that certain sections of the civil service law contravened the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment, noted that the federal constitution prohibits those discriminations which are arbitrary and without reason.[40] Though this was with regard to the federal constitution, the court likewise recognized a state limitation of reasonableness upon the regulation of public employment. The court relied upon several federal decisions to sustain the abridgment of the free speech guaranteed by the Louisiana constitution. It recognized that the legislature could proscribe such free speech, for the purpose of effecting civil service efficiency, if the "means adopted are really calculated to attain such end."[41] Some state standard surely exists by which the power of the legislature to impose conditions upon public employment may be measured. For if not, the legislature may enact a regulation providing that no Republican, Jew or Negro shall be appointed to public office, or that no employees shall attend mass or take any active part in missionary work.[42]

The Ricks case recognized that in regulating public employment the legislature must be seeking an objective justifying the restriction of constitutional freedoms and that the means utilized to achieve this goal must be reasonably related to its attainment. Thus, the exact question under Louisiana law is whether prohibiting the advocacy of integration in public schools is a regulatory measure which is rationally connected with the accomplishment of ends that are within legislative power. A negative answer may quickly be given on the ground that the objective of the prohibition is to preserve segregation of the races in public educational institutions and that this is a goal no longer within state legislative power since the decision in Brown v. Board of Education.[43] However, while this is doubtlessly correct as a matter of federal constitutional law, there are serious difficulties with the conclusion so far as state constitutional law is concerned.

Article XII, Section 1 of the Louisiana constitution requires separate schools for white and colored children. It was amended in 1954 by the addition of the following language: "This provision is made in the exercise of the state police power to promote and protect public health, morals, better education and the peace and good order in the State, and not because of race. The Legislature shall enact laws to enforce the state police power in this regard." Since Article XII, Section 1 was struck down under the fourteenth amendment in Bush v. Orleans

---

[40] Id. at 363, 8 So. 2d at 56.
[41] Id. at 371, 8 So. 2d at 59.
[42] Cf. Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 191-92 (1952).
[43] 347 U.S. 483 (1954).

Parish School Board,[44] the Louisiana court might conclude that the dimensions of the state's police power no longer include the objective of maintaining segregated schools. However, this would not end the matter because the state's police power does include promoting efficiency of the public service, protecting public safety, and preventing breaches of the peace.[45] If proof purporting to establish that the legislature had ulterior motives in passing Act 249 is inadmissible,[46] the abridgment of speech involved cannot be set aside on orthodox considerations of substantive due process unless it can be said that prohibiting advocacy of integration is not reasonably related to attainment of these objectives. Considering the emotional climate in Louisiana over the intermingling of colored and white students in public schools, such a conclusion is difficult to reach.

The force of this argument can be avoided, however, by laying emphasis on two considerations: (1) the fact that Louisiana apparently gives greater protection to freedom of speech than it does to other freedoms, e.g., the use and disposition of property; and (2) the breadth of the statutory proscription.

In Graham v. Jones[47] the Louisiana court held that the exercise of speech may be prohibited only when there is a clear and present danger, i.e., an extremely high degree of imminence, that a serious substantive evil will occur if the speech is not prohibited.[48] In so holding the court recognized that it was broadening the protection of free speech. The case is distinguishable because it involved the power to punish for contempt of court, not the power to impose conditions on public employment. Nonetheless, it is a useful analogy because of the limitations on legislative power to regulate public employment which the Louisiana court recognized in the Ricks case. Can it ration-

---

[44] 138 F. Supp. 336 (E.D. La. 1957).

[45] City of Baton Rouge v. Rebowe, 226 La. 186, 75 So. 2d 239 (1945) (ordinance requiring establishments selling alcoholic beverages to be closed during certain hours held constitutional); Ricks v. Department of State Civil Serv., 200 La. 341, 8 So. 2d 49 (1942) (state civil service law held constitutional); Scott v. City of West Monroe, 95 So. 2d 343 (La. Ct. App. 1957) (ordinance prohibiting parking on certain streets held constitutional). But see State v. Birdsell, 235 La. 396, 104 So. 2d 148 (1958) (act making it unlawful to possess hypodermic syringe or needle without prescription of physician regardless of use for which possessed held unconstitutional); Schwegmann Bros. v. Louisiana Bd. of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 216 La. 148, 43 So. 2d 248 (1949) (sections of an act to license and control certain traffic in beverages held unconstitutional); Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co. v. Louisiana Dep't of Highways, 104 So. 2d 204 (La. Ct. App. 1958) (allowed recovery of expenditures resulting from relocation of pipeline in accordance with state highway department regulation).

[46] Mouledoux v. Maestri, 197 La. 525, 535, 2 So. 2d 11, 14 (1941).

[47] 200 La. 137, 7 So. 2d 688 (1942).

[48] Id. at 157, 7 So. 2d at 694 (quoting with approval Bridges v. California, 314 U.S. 252 [1941]).

ally be said that the mere advocacy of integration produces an extremely high degree of likelihood that any serious substantive evil will imminently occur? An inefficient public school system? Breaches of the peace? Immorality? Disease? Or even the end of enforced racial segregation itself? It is hard to see how.

Specific forms of advocacy might produce such clear and present dangers, e.g., exhorting the listeners to violence. But the statutory language at issue, in the absence of a narrowing judicial construction, is probably broad enough to make it grounds for discharge for a teacher simply to explain the decision in Brown v. Board of Education.[49] Certainly a teacher who went beyond that and stated that he believed the decision to be correct on both legal and moral grounds and expressed the hope that his listeners, after careful consideration of the matter, would reach the same conclusion could well find himself the subject of dismissal proceedings.

It is often argued, in opposition to judicial enforcement of the mixing of the races in public schools, that the problem is better settled by education rather than by law. But, if legislation which prohibits general espousal of the case for integration is valid, where and when is the education to take place? In short, the sweeping character of the statutory standard interdicts constitutionally protected as well as unprotected speech, and existing Louisiana cases afford a basis upon which the state court might strike it down. The court could do so without passing on the question of whether or not, as a matter of state constitutional law, the termination of enforced racial segregation in the public school system is the kind of serious substantive evil the occurrence of which the legislature can seek to prevent.

Restraint Upon Membership and Contributions.—The segment of Act 249 concerning dismissal for "being a member of or . . . contributing to any group, organization, movement or corporation that is by law or injunction prohibited from operating in the state" is another proscription against which state constitutional protections must be matched. A consideration of some of the ways in which corporations may be prohibited from operating in Louisiana reveals the potential operation of the act. Any organization operating in the state, exclusive of churches and national guard organizations, which fails to file an annual list of its members with the Secretary of State may be enjoined from [49] 347 U.S. 483 (1954). See Reynard, Legislation Affecting Segregation, 17 La. L. Rev. 101, 109-10 (1956). The author notes that it is arguable that since the state is not compelled to integrate, it is free to prohibit its school employees from advocating a policy which it is under no duty to institute. However, he recognizes that even such a narrow construction would still fall upon federal constitutional grounds of free speech.

operating in Louisiana.[50] Action under this statute has been successfully instituted against the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.[51] However, that organization is presently active since subsequent to the issuance of the injunction, it submitted its membership lists to the state.[52] Other statutes permit the annulment or vacation of the corporate franchises of business[53] and nonprofit corporations[54] and the certificates of authority of foreign corporations,[55] thus prohibiting them from operating in the state. The justifications for such action range from the commission of acts of fraud[56] and wilful nonfeasance[57] to the wilful failure to file "reports."[58]

A survey of the cases arising under the due process clause[59] of the Louisiana constitution reveals a paucity of decisions wherein constitutional rights have been protected by the application and requirement of substantive due process. Louisiana recognizes that to deprive a person of his right to pursue his chosen calling deprives him of his liberty, and to prevent him from continuing in a lawful pursuit in which he is already engaged deprives him of his property.[60] The legislature may not, under the guise of protecting the public interest, arbitrarily impose unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations.[61]

The holding of a recent case could be applied by analogy to the "membership" proviso under examination. In State v. Birdsell,[62] the court considered an act making it unlawful for any persons, except those of specified classes, to possess a hypodermic syringe or needle without the prescription or certificate of a licensed physician. This statute was held to be unreasonable and violative of due process in that it made the possession of the syringe or needle unlawful regardless of its intended use, and created a conclusive presumption that such possession was for an illegal purpose. This case supports the contention

---

[50] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 12:401-09 (1950).

[51] Louisiana ex rel. Gremillion v. NAACP, 90 So. 2d 884 (La. Ct. App. 1956); Louisiana ex rel. Le Blanc v. Lewis, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 571 (1956); McKay, The Repression Of Civil Rights As An Aftermath Of the School Segregation Cases, 4 How. L.J. 9, 19 (1958).

[52] McKay, supra note 51.

[53] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 12:65, :701 (1950).

[54] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 12:150, :701 (1950).

[55] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 12:212, :701 (1950).

[56] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 12:65, :150, :212 (1950).

[57] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 12:701 (1950).

[58] Ibid.

[59] La. Const. art. I, § 2.

[60] State v. Chisesi, 187 La. 675, 685, 175 So. 453, 457 (1937) (striking down requirement that farm produce dealers procure license in order to sell).

[61] City of Alexandria v. Hall, 171 La. 595, 602, 131 So. 722, 724 (1930) (quoting with approval State v. City of Laramie, 40 Wyo. 74, 275 Pac. 106, 107 [1929]) (ordinance requiring barber shops to close at a prescribed hour held unconstitutional).

[62] 235 La. 396, 104 So. 2d 148 (1958).

that it would be a violation of due process for membership alone to create a conclusive presumption of unfitness that would deprive a teacher of his employment. Such a presumption is arbitrary and denies the teacher a fair opportunity to rebut it, as Act 249 is explicit in that such membership, ipso facto, is ground for dismissal.[63] There is no provision in the act that indicates that the question of whether or not membership alone is a proper ground for dismissal can be raised or considered in proceedings before the school board. In addition, there is no express requirement that the teacher have knowledge of the organization's proscribed status or the fact that membership in such an organization may result in dismissal.

However, the Louisiana Supreme Court has stated that if a statute is susceptible of a construction that upholds its constitutionality the courts should so construe it.[64] Affirmative relief against the operation of the "membership" provision may depend upon whether or not a saving construction of it could be effected. Questions of due process raised by the act could probably be obviated by construing it to require, as a requisite for proper dismissal, knowledge on the part of the teacher that the organization to which he belonged was prohibited from operating in the state. Knowledge that such membership was a ground for dismissal could also be required as a matter of construction. Similarly, an opportunity could be provided to rebut the presumption of unfitness. Such constructions, however, would have to be engrafted onto the naked language of Act 249.

One can conceive of other situations in which application of the statutory proscription of freedom of association to a particular teacher might be unconstitutional, e.g., where the organization's conduct was so innocuous that continued membership in it, even with knowledge, would not support rational inferences as to the member's fitness to be a school teacher. However, one can also conceive of situations in which application of the statutory restraint would seem to be constitutional. For example, suppose that the attorney general demanded that the White Citizens Council and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People file a list of their members on the ground that, armed with this information, the state might better be able to prevent and control incitement to violence. Suppose further that each organization refused to disclose the information and an injunction issued. If teachers A and B persisted in membership in the two organizations, respectively, with knowledge of these facts, and were tried by their school board and dismissed, it could hardly be said that the inference of unfitness was arbitrary and unreasonable.

---

[63] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:443 (Supp. 1958), for text see note 17 supra.

[64] Tanner v. Beverly Country Club, 217 La. 1043, 1059, 47 So. 2d 905, 910 (1950).

It can be argued, of course, that since the breadth of the statutory standard sweeps within its ambit protected as well as unprotected conduct, the proscription is just as offensive to constitutional liberties as the pervasive restraint of freedom of speech discussed above. The difficulty with this argument is that while Article I, Section 5 of the Louisiana constitution guarantees the people the right peaceably to assemble,[65] there are no cases which indicate that it creates a right of association entitled to the degree of protection given to freedom of speech.

Therefore, consideration of constitutional issues raised by this part of Act 249 might well be avoided by the Louisiana courts except in the context of particular applications in particular cases. Against this likelihood must be balanced the fact that such a policy would involve much litigation before the boundaries of the "membership" provision's effectiveness as a ground for dismissal could be determined. Until these boundaries were ascertained, great uncertainty and hesitation would exist with regard to joining or remaining members of organizations. This uncertainty and its inhibiting affect might cause the courts to be lenient in allowing a test of constitutionality prior to concrete applications of Act 249. These same factors might also dispose a court to be less likely to search for saving constructions than would otherwise be the case.

The commonplace fact that people are judged by their associations must be recognized. Probably the state could justify an interest in knowing, prior to employment, the character of the associations in which its teachers are engaged. A denial of employment, based upon the teacher's associates, would be more difficult to attack than dismissals under Act 249.

If the discharge feature of Act 249 is improper because of the "membership" proviso, it follows that dismissal for "contributing" to such organizations would also be a violation of due process.

Vagueness.—Louisiana courts have not struck down a nonpenal statute for vagueness, the cases examined having dealt with the application of this test to penal statutes.[66] Certain sections of Act 249 could well be deemed unconstitutionally vague. This is particularly true of the provision relating to an "act toward integration." This

[65] La. Const. art. I, § 5: "The people have the right peaceably to assemble and apply to those vested with the powers of government for a redress of grievances by petition or remonstrance."

[66] E.g., State v. Truby, 211 La. 178, 29 So. 2d 758 (1947); State v. Mitchiner, 204 La. 415, 15 So. 2d 809 (1943); City of Shreveport v. Moran, 174 La. 271, 140 So. 475 (1932); State v. Gardner, 151 La. 874, 92 So. 368 (1922). La. Const. art. I, § 10: "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him . . . ."

phrase has been interpreted by one school principal to prohibit the signing of a certificate addressed to a school with a Caucasian student body stating that a Negro student has good character and is eligible to attend the institution.[67] A recent federal case applied the void-for-vagueness doctrine to a nonpenal statute finding it nonetheless valid.[68] The statute in question authorized deportation of aliens who had been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude. The court applied the test because of the "grave nature of deportation."[69] Considering the emotional climate in Louisiana today, dismissal from a job as a result of performing an "act toward integration" seems rather grave when viewed with regard to future employment opportunities, social acceptance, and physical well-being. If the rationale in the federal case were applied to Act 249 by analogy, it appears that the considered portion would be held to be defective for vagueness. Louisiana cases considering penal statutes agree that acts so broadly drawn as to be vague and indefinite are unconstitutional.[70] Act 249 provides no standards enabling a reasonable man to determine what are "acts toward integration."

IV

Constitutionality as a Matter of Federal Law

As in the case of Louisiana law, a presumption of constitutionality generally operates under federal law.[71] However, first amendment freedoms perhaps still enjoy a preferred position in our constitutional order.[72] Therefore, the presumption of constitutionality would probably not have as great an operative force with regard to the first amendment guarantees restrained by Act 249, viz., freedoms of speech and association, as it would have in situations involving other interests. That freedom of association is protected by the first amendment has been most recently recognized in the case of NAACP v. Alabama.[73]

A federal case recently affirmed by the Supreme Court, Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham Board of Education,[74] indicates that the motive

---

[67] See text accompanying note 25 supra.

[68] Tseung Chu v. Cornell, 247 F.2d 929 (9th Cir. 1957) (dictum).

[69] Id. at 939.

[70] E.g., State v. Truby, 211 La. 178, 203-04, 29 So. 2d 758, 766 (1947); City of Shreveport v. Moran, 174 La. 271, 272-73, 140 So. 475, 476 (1932).

[71] Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U.S. 678, 684-85 (1888); cf. Grand River Dam Authority v. Jarvis, 124 F.2d 914, 917 (10th Cir. 1942).

[72] Cf. Joseph Burstyn, Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U.S. 495, 504 (1952) (by implication); Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516, 529-30 (1945). But see Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 U.S. 250 (1952); Kovacs v. Cooper, 336 U.S. 77, 89 (1949) (concurring opinion, Frankfurter, J.).

[73] 357 U.S. 449, 460 (1958).

[74] 162 F. Supp. 372 (N.D. Ala. 1958).

of the Louisiana legislature will have little, if any, relevance in determining whether or not it had the power to pass Act 249:

> In testing constitutionality "we cannot undertake a search for motive." . . . "If the State has the power to do an act, its intention or the reason by which it is influenced in doing it cannot be inquired into." . . . As there is no one corporate mind of the legislature, there is in reality no single motive. Motives vary from one individual member of the legislature to another.[75]

The language of Supreme Court cases indicates that attack upon the face of legislation is possible.[76] However, as these cases dealt with first amendment freedoms, it is probable that successful attack upon the face of legislation could be attempted only if these freedoms were in jeopardy.[77] If this is true, the provisions of Act 249 relating to an act toward integration and contributions to organizations prohibited or enjoined from operating in the state may be unassailable, as a matter of federal law, except as applied in particular cases.

Restraint of Freedom of Advocacy.—Freedom of speech is among the fundamental personal liberties which are protected by the fourteenth amendment from invasion by state action.[78] The "advocacy" feature of Act 249 must be viewed in this light. All ideas having even the slightest redeeming social importance—unorthodox ideas, controversial ideas, even ideas hateful to the prevailing climate of opinion—have the protection of the guarantee of free speech, unless they encroach upon the limited area of more important interests. The protection given speech was fashioned to assure unfettered interchange of ideas for the bringing about of political and social changes.[79] A function of free speech under our system of government is to invite dispute. It may best serve its high purpose when it induces a condition of unrest, creates dissatisfaction with conditions as they are, or even stirs people to anger. Speech is often provocative and challenging, and may strike at prejudice and preconceptions and have profoundly unsettling effects as it presses for acceptance of an idea. Freedom of speech, though not absolute, is nevertheless protected, unless it is

---

[75] Id. at 381.

[76] See Saia v. New York, 334 U.S. 558, 559-60 (1948) (ordinance forbidding the use of sound amplification devices without permission of police chief and prescribing no standards for the exercise of his discretion); Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 96-98 (1940) (statute forbidding picketing); Lovell v. City of Griffin, 303 U.S. 444, 451-52 (1938) (ordinance forbidding distribution of literature without permission of city manager).

[77] See Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 373 (1886).

[78] Lovell v. City of Griffin, 303 U.S. 444 (1938); De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 364 (1937); Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 244 (1936); Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 707 (1931); Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 368 (1931).

[79] Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 484 (1957).

shown likely to produce a clear and present danger of a serious substantive evil that rises far above public inconvenience, annoyance, or unrest.[80] Were such unpopular, annoying views not protected, there would be forged "a ready instrument for the suppression of the faith which any minority cherishes but which does not happen to be in favor. That would be a complete repudiation of the philosophy of the Bill of Rights."[81]

To get to the crux of the matter at hand—the "right" to advocate integration does exist. NAACP v. Alabama[82] involved an attempt to secure the membership lists of an organization advocating integration. With regard to this attempt the Supreme Court stated:

> we think it apparent that compelled disclosure of petitioner's . . . membership is likely to affect adversely the ability of petitioner and its members to pursue their collective effort to foster beliefs which they admittedly have the right to advocate . . . . (Emphasis added.)[83]

Plainly this includes the right to "general" advocacy; that is, to urge upon the listener the moral and legal soundness of integration.[84] A more difficult question is whether it includes "specific" advocacy, that is, urging the listener to act in such a way that integration is facilitated and furthered. It would seem that advocacy of such action would be included in this right. In Yates v. United States[85] the Supreme Court stated that advocacy of overthrow of the government by force and violence is permissible, at least so far as the Smith Act is concerned, as long as it is advocated as an abstract principle. Such advocacy, however, can not be of the character to incite immediate action to the end of effecting overthrow of the government by force and violence.[86] It would seem an unusual extension of this rule to say that advocacy of integration could not be in terms of inciting action to that end, assuming "action" not to mean violence. Therefore, it appears that there is a constitutionally protected right to advocate immediate peaceful action to effectuate integration of the public schools.

In each case in which an exercise of legislative power comes into conflict with the freedoms protected by the first amendment, the validity of the legislation in the last analysis will depend upon a balance of the several factors affecting the public interest.[87] The state

---

80 Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1 (1949).

81 Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 116 (1943).

82 357 U.S. 449 (1958).

83 Id. at 462-63. See also NAACP v. Patty, 159 F. Supp. 503, 525-26 (E.D. Va. 1958).

84 See Yates v. United States, 354 U.S. 298, 318 (1957).

85 354 U.S. 298 (1957).

86 Id. at 318.

87 United States v. Painters Local 481, 79 F. Supp. 516, 522 (D. Conn. 1948), rev'd on other grounds, 172 F.2d 854 (2d Cir. 1949).

must have an overriding interest in order to impinge upon constitutional freedoms,[88] and any attempt to restrict first amendment liberties must be tested against the standards of the clear and present danger doctrine.[89] "[T]he substantive evil must be extremely serious and the degree of imminence extremely high before utterances can be punished."[90]

It is arguable that since restraints of speech have been sustained where directed toward improving the efficiency of public servants,[91] or protecting the school system,[92] such interests could justify the proscription of advocacy of integration by teachers. However, the means adopted to prevent the evil would have to be reasonable.[93]

> When particular conduct is regulated in the interest of public order, and the regulation results in an indirect, conditional, partial abridgment of speech, the duty of the courts is to determine which of these two conflicting interests demands the greater protection under the particular circumstances presented. The high place in which the right to speak, think, and assemble as you will was held by the Framers of the Bill of Rights and is held today by those who value liberty both as a means and an end indicates the solicitude with which we must view any assertion of personal freedoms.[94]

Perhaps the efficiency of a teacher or a school may be impaired as a result of advocating integration. However, if the state could not indiscriminately prohibit or punish advocacy of even questionable social or moral doctrines in order to maintain efficiency, prohibiting espousal of the wisdom of establishing a constitutional condition in public school education (i.e., integration) would not seem to be reasonable. More conclusive as to the unconstitutionality of this aspect of Act 249 is the fact that advocacy of integration seems unlikely to create the extremely high degree of imminence of an inefficient school system necessary to properly warrant its denial.

As has been previously discussed,[95] the "advocacy" section of the 88 Breard v. Alexandria, 341 U.S. 622 (1951); Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516, 530 (1945); NAACP v. Patty, 159 F. Supp. 503, 533 (E.D. Va. 1958).

---

89 Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516, 530 (1945). Cf. Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 486 (1957); in which a statute punishing publication of obscene material was held not violative of due process because of vagueness. The Court held that punishment for obscenity is not dependent upon a showing that the obscene material creates a clear and present danger of anti-social conduct.

90 Bridges v. California, 314 U.S. 252, 263 (1941).

91 See United Pub. Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75, 99 (1947) "[E]fficiency may best be obtained by prohibiting active participation by classified employees in politics as party officers or workers."

92 See Adler v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 485, 497 (1952).

93 See Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U.S. 60, 74 (1917).

94 American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 399 (1950).

95 See text accompanying note 49 supra.

act is apparently broad enough to encompass mere expressed agreement with the Supreme Court's decision declaring state enforced segregation to be unlawful. Thus this part of Act 249 could well fall precisely within a pronouncement of the Supreme Court:

> It is settled that a statute so vague and indefinite, in form and as interpreted, as to permit within the scope of its language the punishment of incidents fairly within the protection of the guarantee of free speech is void, on its face, as contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment. . . . A failure of a statute limiting freedom of expression to give fair notice of what acts will be punished and such a statute's inclusion of prohibition's against expressions, protected by the principles of the First Amendment, violates an accused's rights under procedural due process and freedom of speech or press.[96] (Emphasis added.)

It may be argued that the restraint of "advocacy" is constitutional because the teacher has no right to work for the state except on the terms it prescribes. Such employment is a privilege, and if he does not choose to work on such terms as the state prescribes, he may go elsewhere.[97] However, the Supreme Court has stated, in response to a contention that no right to work for the state exists, and that such employment is a privilege, that:

> To draw . . . the facile generalization that there is no constitutionally protected right to public employment is to obscure the issue . . . . We need not pause to consider whether an abstract right to public employment exists. It is sufficient to say that Constitutional protection does extend to the public servant whose exclusion pursuant to a statute is patently arbitrary or discriminatory.[98]

In Slochower v. Board of Education,[99] a teacher tested the constitutionality of a statute which authorized his summary dismissal as a result of his claim of the fifth amendment protection in a proceeding before a federal committee. In view of the summary dismissal aspect of the statute, it was held to be a denial of due process and thus unconstitutional. The Court recognized that although no constitutional right to government employment existed, a governmental employee need only

---

[96] Winters v. New York, 333 U.S. 507, 509-10 (1948) (law prohibiting distribution of magazines comprised of stories of lust crimes held unconstitutional). The statute involved was criminal, thus the rationale of the case is not strictly applicable to Act 249 unless applied as suggested in text accompanying note 66 supra.

[97] See Adler v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 485, 492 (1952). The case involved the Feinberg Law of New York which authorized a board to establish a list of subversive organizations and provide rules for denial of, and dismissal from, employment, with regard to teachers who were members of proscribed organizations. Its constitutionality was upheld.

[98] Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 191-92 (1952). But see Schware v. Board of Bar Examiners, 353 U.S. 232, 239 n.5 (1957).

[99] 350 U.S. 551 (1956). But see Beilan v. Board of Pub. Educ., 357 U.S. 399 (1958).

comply with reasonable, lawful, and nondiscriminatory terms laid down by proper authorities.[100] To condition the right to continued governmental employment upon the acceptance of a restraint upon the advocacy of establishing a constitutional condition in public school education seems arbitrary and discriminatory and thus unconstitutional.

Denial of Membership or Contribution.—Act 249 provides that a teacher may be dismissed for being a member of or contributing to any group, organization, or corporation that is by law or injunction prohibited from operating in the state. In Wieman v. Updegraff the Court struck down a state statute because it excluded persons from state employment solely on the basis of membership in an organization, regardless of whether or not the individual had any knowledge concerning the activities and purposes of such organization.[101] Apparently Act 249, like the oath tested in the Wieman case, would deprive the individual of state employment on the basis of membership alone. It would not require the individual to have any knowledge of the character, functions, or purpose of the organization. In the Wieman case the denial of employment was based on past organizational membership. Act 249 concerns present membership. However, this distinction does not seem to be a valid reason for not applying to the act the rule of Wieman. Lack of knowledge was the determining factor in Wieman, not the time of membership or the reasons for the employee having no knowledge concerning the potential effect of such membership.

The lack of consistent adherence to organizational beliefs that is typical of American "joining" is good reason for not assuming, as the framers of the Louisiana act apparently did, that membership alone is proof of the fact that the member possesses the traits that caused the organization to be prohibited or enjoined. Though a teacher's associates may be properly considered in determining his fitness,[102] "indiscriminate classification of innocent with knowing activity must fall as an assertion of arbitrary power."[103]

A recent Supreme Court decision emphasized the importance of knowledge with regard to liability flowing from a lack thereof.[104] The Court reversed a conviction for failure to comply with an ordinance requiring persons convicted of felonies to register.

But we deal here with conduct that is wholly passive—mere failure to [100] 350 U.S. at 555.

[101] 344 U.S. 183 (1952).
[102] Adler v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 485, 493 (1952).
[103] Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 191 (1952).
[104] Lambert v. California, 355 U.S. 225, 228-29 (1957).

> register. It is unlike the commission of acts, or the failure to act under circumstances that should alert the doer to the consequences of his deed . . . . Engrained in our concept of due process is the requirement of notice . . . . Notice is required in a myriad of situations where a penalty or forfeiture might be suffered for mere failure to act . . . . We believe that actual knowledge of the duty to register or proof of the probability of such knowledge and subsequent failure to comply are necessary before a conviction under the ordinance can stand.[105]

By analogy a teacher may not be discharged for membership in an organization unless he had notice or knowledge of the fact that such association was prohibited from operating in Louisiana and that he must sever his membership relation in order to maintain his employment. However, these defects of lack of knowledge can be cured by a process of construction by the school boards or courts, thus defeating an attack on Act 249 based upon such infirmities.

This leaves aside the question of whether or not the act itself provides sufficient notice to those affected as to what organizations are prohibited or enjoined. Also fit matter for consideration is the reasonableness of the standards by which a teacher's fitness is determined. Query: Is membership, per se, even knowingly, in an organization prohibited or enjoined from operating in the state adequate ground for inferring that the teacher is unfit? There is apparently no opportunity for a teacher to contest the presumption that he is incompetent for his position simply because of membership in such an association. A construction of Act 249 to the effect that such opportunity exists seems strained. The act is explicit in that "membership" is adequate ground for discharge. There is no provision that "membership" raises only a prima facie cause for dismissal, as was provided, for example, in the statute involved in the Adler v. Board of Education case.[106]

With regard to the power of the state to place particular organizations off-limits for school teachers, a saving construction might be achieved, as an inquiry into the legislative judgment is limited to the question of whether any state of facts either known or which could reasonably be assumed affords support for that judgment.[107] It might appear that American Communications Ass'n v. Douds[108] and Adler v. Board of Education[109] would form the basis for an interpretation of the "membership" section of Act 249 that would preserve it. In the Douds case, labor unions whose officers did not file non-Communist affidavits

---

105 Ibid.
106 342 U.S. 485, 489 (1952).
107 United States v. Carolene Prods. Co., 304 U.S. 144, 154 (1938).
108 339 U.S. 382, 393 (1950).
109 342 U.S. 485 (1952).

with the National Labor Relations Board were denied its services. In the Adler case, school employees could be removed from their positions if they were found to be members of organizations that advocated overthrow of the government by force or violence.

It is arguable that since it may be an organization of an undesirable nature that is enjoined from operating in Louisiana, dismissal of one of its members is justifiable. A saving construction of this character has been discussed previously.[110] However, reliance upon the Douds and Adler cases for such an interpretation points directly to the substance of the argument against the "membership" proviso being saved by a reasonable construction. In each of these cases there was a legislative finding concerning the nature, character, and purpose of the specific organizations deemed to be undesirable.[111] The terms of Act 249 do not reflect any legislative concern with putting beyond the pale only organizations whose usual characteristics and functions are such that they raise problems of special concern to the effective exercise of the police power. Had the legislative interest been with respect to the type or character of organizations deemed undesirable, to the extent of justifying dismissal for mere membership therein, the act could have easily been drawn in such a fashion. This is substantiated by the fact that membership in specific organizations of certain characteristics and of consistent purposes has already been declared by the Louisiana legislature to be just cause for dismissal from state employment.[112] If indeed there was a legislative concern with the nature of the organizations, it was directed towards groups assisting efforts to achieve integration.[113] Therefore, a saving construction would seemingly have to be that at least one of the reasons which justifies a banning of an organization from operation within the state is also sufficient reason for conclusively presuming that a teacher-member of such banned group is undesirable as an instructor. Considering the character and number of grounds for such proscriptions, such a construction would be unrealistic.[114]

Cases have referred to the "right" or "freedom" of association,[115]

---

110 See text accompanying note 65 supra.

111 See Adler v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 485, 489 (1952); American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 388-89, 391, 412 (1950).

112 La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 14:378 (Supp. 1958).

113 See text accompanying note 51 supra.

114 See text accompanying notes 53-58 supra, for some of the reasons for which an organization may be prohibited by law from operating within Louisiana.

115 See, e.g., Sweezy v. New Hampshire, 354 U.S. 234, 250-51 (1957) (dictum); Adler v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 485, 492 (1952) (dictum). See also Robison, Protection of Associations From Compulsory Disclosure of Membership, 58 Colum. L. Rev. 614, 620, 622 (1958); Abernathy, The Right of Association, 6 S.C.L.Q. 32 (1953).

and municipal ordinances prohibiting and penalizing association with persons of ill repute have been held unconstitutional as infringements upon personal liberty and freedom.[116] The recent case of NAACP v. Alabama recognizes the protection of the Constitution with regard to infringements upon such freedom.[117] Alabama attempted to acquire from the NAACP its membership lists, contending that such lists were necessary to the determination of whether or not the organization was subject to the provisions of a statute requiring foreign corporations to file certain papers in order to do business within the state. Although the state had taken no direct action to abridge the freedom of association of the members of the NAACP, the court recognized the restraining affect of compelled disclosure of the organization's membership lists upon such freedom. The Court denied the right of the state to restrain this freedom, in the absence of a sufficient reason for so doing.[118] Under some circumstances, indirect discouragements undoubtedly have the same coercive effect upon the exercise of rights guaranteed by the first amendment as imprisonment, fines, injunctions or taxes.[119] State action which has the effect of curtailing the freedom to associate will be scrutinized closely. The deterrent affect of this type of action on others wishing to exercise this freedom has been noted by the Supreme Court.[120]

> Such unwarranted inhibition upon the free spirit of teachers affects not only those who . . . are immediately before the court. It has an unmistakeable tendency to chill that free play of the spirit which all teachers ought especially to cultivate and practice, it makes for caution and timidity in their associations by potential teachers.[121]

And, the "membership" aspect of Act 249, to transplant the words of Mr. Justice Frankfurter, is bound to operate as a real deterrent to people contemplating even innocent associations. How can anyone be certain that an organization with which he affiliates will not at some time in the future be prohibited by law or injunction from operating in the state? All but the heartiest may well hesitate to join organizations if they know that by such a proscription they may be disqualified from employment.[122] It seems reasonable to assume that the deterring 116 See 5 McQuillin, Municipal Corporations § 19.27 (3d ed. 1949) (citing cases).

---

117 357 U.S. 449 (1958).

118 Id. at 461, 462.

119 American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 402 (1950) (dictum).

120 See, e.g., Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 195 (1952) (concurring opinion, Frankfurter, J.) (dictum); Garner v. Board of Pub. Works, 341 U.S. 716, 727-28 (1951) (concurring opinion, Frankfurter, J.) (dictum); American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 393 (1950) (dictum).

121 Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 195 (1952) (concurring opinion, Frankfurter, J.) (dictum).

122 Garner v. Board of Pub. Works, 341 U.S. 716, 727-28 (1951) (opinion of Frankfurter, J., concurring in part, dissenting in part) (dictum).

and impinging effect of the "membership" segment of the act upon freedom of association, the insufficient interest of the state, in this broad, pervasive context, and the intent of the act would combine to render it unconstitutional.

If the "membership" segment is invalid for any of the previously noted defects, it follows that "contributions" to proscribed organizations is an improper reason for a dismissal of teachers.

Vagueness.—If, as suggested in the discussion of state law,[123] the rationale of Tseung Chu v. Cornell[124] were applied to Act 249, sections of it might fall as a result of the "void for vagueness" doctrine. Federal law is to the effect that a penal statute which requires or forbids the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application, violates the first essential of due process of law.[125] Arguing from the analogy of the Tseung Chu case, the "act toward integration" section, viewed, though a civil statute, as almost penal in its application, might fall as a result of its obvious vagueness.

V
Conclusion

Act 249 raises substantial questions of constitutionality both as to state and federal law. It is clear that its purpose is to cast the pall of fear over those public school teachers who are unsympathetic with the objectives of the majority as manifested by the legislative action. It is also clear that, at least as to some teachers, the statute has achieved its purpose of abridging their freedom to speak, even on matters within their curricular responsibilities, as well as their freedom to maintain organizational affiliations. Viewed abstractly, there is little doubt that the legislation offends federal constitutional guarantees. Moreover, adequate grounds for reaching the same result exist under Louisiana constitutional law.

The challenging question is: What can be done about it? And who can do it—a taxpayer, a teacher, a student, or a parent? What remedy should he seek, and when should he seek it—before or after attempted enforcement?

The hoary but salutary principle of Fletcher v. Peck[126] makes the ulterior motives of the legislature in passing the statute immaterial. The vague (indeed, almost unintelligible) nature of the statutory

---

[123] See text accompanying note 66 supra.

[124] 247 F.2d 929 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 892 (1957).

[125] Lanzetta v. New Jersey, 306 U.S. 451, 453 (1939) (dictum) (quoting with approval Connally v. General Constr. Co., 269 U.S. 385, 391 [1926]).

[126] 10 U.S. (6 Cranch.) 87 (1810).

standards perhaps makes the act vulnerable to attack on its face. But it is this same consideration that possibly makes the statute savable by a narrowing construction, particularly in connection with the as yet nebulous contours of the freedom of public employees to associate.

In addition to the question of whether the statute can be attacked on its face or only as interpreted and applied, problems of standing, ripeness, and exhaustion of remedies stand in the way of a school teacher's obtaining a judicial determination on the merits except by engaging in proscribed speech or conduct and setting up arguments of unconstitutionality as a defense to dismissal proceedings. Furthermore, so far as the federal courts are concerned, considerations of comity, i.e., the doctrine of equitable abstention, may operate as a bar to relief in the absence of an authoritative construction of the statute by the state courts.

These and other procedural and remedial questions will be discussed in the second and concluding part of this article.

APPENDIX

State	Date of Enactment	Persons or Things Regulated	Nature of Regulation	Penalty for Non-Compliance
Arkansas[1]	1958	Superintendents, principals and teachers in public educational institutions	Required to disclose by affidavit identity of organizations to which they belong or contribute or have belonged or contributed in the past five years	Ineligible for employment Filing of false affidavit punishable as perjury
	1958	Organizations engaged in activities designed to hinder, harass, and interfere with power of state to control and operate public schools	Upon request of county judge required to file lists of members and other organizational data	Misdemeanor
	1957	Persons or corporations that solicit or receive contributions for organizations that use such funds for the "promotion of integration"	Required to keep accounts, required to file accounts and register with State Sovereignty Commission	Misdemeanor
Louisiana[2]	1956	Teachers and school bus operators	Prohibited from belonging or contributing to organizations that cannot legally operate in the state	Loss of employment
			Prohibited from advocating or doing any act toward bringing about racial integration in public educational institutions	Loss of employment

[1] Ark. Acts 2 Extra Sess. 1958, Nos. 10, 12; Ark. Acts 1957, No. 85.

[2] La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 17:443, :462, :493 (Supp. 1958).

APPENDIX (Continued)

State	Date of Enactment	Persons or Things Regulated	Nature of Regulation	Penalty for Non-Compliance
Mississippi[3]	1958	Organizations with an officer who at any time was an officer of an organization listed as subversive by the U.S. Attorney General or a Congressional Committee	Required to disclose identity of officers and members to Secretary of State	Misdemeanor Meetings and attendance at meetings prohibited
	1956	Superintendents, principals, and teachers in public educational institutions	Required to disclose by affidavit identity of organizations to which they have belonged or contributed in the past five years	Ineligible for employment Filing of false affidavit punishable as perjury and teaching license revoked
South Carolina[4]	1957	All public employees, including those employed by school districts	Required to disclose all organizational memberships and affiliations	Ineligible for employment
Texas[5]	1958	Organizations engaged in activities designed to interfere with power of state to control and operate its public schools	Required to file, upon request of county judge, list of members and other organizational data	Misdemeanor
Virginia[6]	1956	Persons, partnerships, and associations that promote or oppose passage of state legislation in behalf of any race or color, advocate racial segregation or integration, act to cause racial conflicts or violence, or raise or expend funds for employment of counsel or payment of costs in racial litigation	Required to register and file list of members and other organizational data	Misdemeanor

[3] Miss. Laws 1958, ch. 484; Miss. Code Ann. §§ 6282-41 to -44 (Supp. 1956).
[4] S.C. Code § 1-39.1 (Supp. 1958).
[5] Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 2906-3 (Supp. 1958).
[6] Va. Code Ann. §§ 18-349.18 to -349.2 (Supp. 1958).

VIRGINIAN UPHELD IN CONTEMPT CASE

Civil Liberties

High Court Affirms Silence in Racial Inquiry, Applying Watkins Rule to States

MAY 5 1959

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 4—A Quaker who refused to answer questions by a Virginia legislative committee about race relations won his freedom from a contempt conviction today in the Supreme Court.

The court held unanimously that the committee had not made clear how its questions were pertinent to the official subject of inquiry. Without that explanation of pertinence, it said, a witness could not constitutionally be forced to answer.

Thus the court applied to state investigations the rule of pertinence it laid down for Federal inquiries in 1957, in the case of John T. Watkins. Mr. Watkins, a labor official, had refused to answer questions by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

The witness in today's case was David H. Scull, a printer in near-by Annandale, Va. Shortly after the 1954 Supreme Court decision holding public school segregation unconstitutional, he began publicly advocating compliance with the ruling.

In 1957, Mr. Scull was subpoenaed by the Virginia Committee on Law Reform and Racial Activities, set up by the Legislature under the chairmanship of Delegate James M. Thomson, Democrat of Alexandria.

Silent To 31

At the hearing Mr. Scull was asked whether he belonged to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, had paid lawyers' fees in segregation cases or was associated with the American Civil Liberties Union or B'nai B'rith.

Mr. Scull refused to answer thirty-one questions. He refused again when a Virginia judge ordered him to reply, and was sentenced to ten days in jail and fined $50. The conviction was upheld by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals.

Today's opinion was by Justice Hugo L. Black. Because Justice Black was in Houston, attending a judicial conference, it was read in court by Justice John Marshall Harlan.

The opinion noted that Chairman Thomson had told Mr. Scull that three general subjects were under inquiry. They were the tax status of racial organizations, school integration and the unauthorized practice of the law.

Purposes 'Unclear'

The court found today that the chairman had never explained how any of the questions to Mr. Scull were related to those subjects. Some of the questions, it said, were clearly refused to answer questions by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Civil Liberties - 1959

The witness in today's case was David H. Scull, a printer in near-by Annandale, Va. Shortly after the 1954 Supreme Court decision holding public school segregation unconstitutional, he began publicly advocating compliance with the ruling.

In 1957, Mr. Scull was subpoenaed by the Virginia Committee on Law Reform and Racial Activities, set up by the Legislature under the chairmanship of Delegate James M. Thomson, Democrat of Alexandria.

Silent To 31

At the hearing Mr. Scull was asked whether he belonged to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, had paid lawyers' fees in segregation cases or was associated with the American Civil Liberties Union or B'nai B'rith.

Mr. Scull refused to answer thirty-one questions. He refused again when a Virginia judge ordered him to reply, and was sentenced to ten days in jail and fined $50. The conviction was upheld by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals.

Today's opinion was by Justice Hugo L. Black. Because Justice Black was in Houston, attending a judicial conference, it was read in court by Justice John Marshall Harlan.

The opinion noted that Chairman Thomson had told Mr. Scull that three general subjects were under inquiry. They were the tax status of racial organizations, school integration and the unauthorized practice of the law.

Purposes 'Unclear'

The court found today that the chairman had never explained how any of the questions to Mr. Scull were related to those subjects. Some of the questions, it said, were clearly not so related.

"The purposes of the inquiry were so unclear," Justice Black wrote, "in fact conflicting, that Scull did not have an opportunity of understanding the basis for the questions.

"To sustain his conviction for contempt under these circumstances would be to send him to jail for a crime he could not with reasonable certainty know he was committing. The information given to Scull was far too wavering, confused and cloudy to sustain his conviction."

The court did not reach a broader contention by Mr. Scull. This was that the questions, whether pertinent or not, had violated his Constitutional freedom of speech and association.

Justice Black did say that the Virginia inquiry had "touched an area of speech, press and association of vital public importance." And he went on:

"Certainty [in committee questions] is all the more essential when vagueness might induce individuals to forego their rights of speech, press and association for fear of violating an unclear law."

The case was argued for Mr. Scull by Joseph L. Rauh Jr. of Washington and for the committee by Leslie Hall of Alexandria.

Two other contempt cases argued along with the Scull case in the Supreme Court last November remained undecided. They concern the power of the House Un-American Activties Committee to investigate education and of New Hampshire's attorney general to investigate subversion

Civil Liberties - 1959

WASHINGTON POST MAY 9 1959

Inquisition's End

Civil Liberties

The comment of Virginia Del. James M. Thomson about the Supreme Court decision upsetting the contempt conviction of David H. Scull tells a lot about Mr. Thomson and the kind of inquisition he tried to conduct. Mr. Scull, the vice president of the Fairfax County Council on Human Relations, had been convicted for declining to answer, on constitutional grounds, 31 questions asked him by the Thomson Committee investigating racial activities in Virginia. Said Mr. Thomson: "With the complexion of the Court the way it is—protecting subversives and people interested in integration—what other result could you expect?"

The simple and obvious purpose of the Virginia Committee on Law Reform and Racial Activities as set up by the General Assembly in 1956 was the harassment of persons and organizations working for school desegregation. Mr. Thomson ran the Committee as an inquisition, with questions which in Mr. Scull's case ranged far afield to cover association with parent-teacher groups and private individuals. The Court reversed the conviction on the point that despite repeated requests Mr. Thomson did not tell Mr. Scull the relevance of the questions to the purpose of the investigation.

It is regrettable, we think, that the Court did not also meet the free speech and assembly issues raised by Mr. Scull, although four justices noted that they could not conceive of any state issue which would warrant infringement of those rights. In any event, Mr. Scull's courage and the Court's forthrightness have disposed of what was an altogether obscene episode, and one which it may be hoped Virginia is resolved not to repeat.

Civil Liberties

Report No. L-3
May 11, 1959

Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

HOW COULD SHUT SCHOOLS AFFECT STATE ECONOMY ?

In November 1958, Atlanta Constitution Business Editor James Montgomery conducted a state-wide survey to determine what economic effects would result from closing any public schools in Georgia. 129 questionnaires were completed by administrative, engineering, and research personnel in 13 major industrial plants and the state's four largest universities. Results of the survey were published in a series of three articles, November 30 - December 2; three subsequent articles offered some conclusions and observations. Some excerpts follow:

"Three out of four people in administrative, research and engineering work in the universities and industries in Georgia would be willing to send their children to public schools integrated to some extent... 17.1 per cent of those in key industrial and university positions say they plan to leave Georgia if their children's public schools are closed. Moving away was listed as the second alternative by 21 additional parents, who said they would have to leave Georgia if their children's public schools were not reopened within three months to a year."
(November 30)

- 0 -

"The industrial and university officials...expressed unanimous agreement that closing of public schools would impair both the present economic strength and future economic development of the state.

* * *

"Several examples indicated that the existing possibility of school closings is now hampering the recruitment of qualified engineering, research and management personnel - the sort needed to assure economic progress... In addition to the fact that such people now living elsewhere are growing less inclined to move here with their children as long as continued public school operation remains uncertain, a significant proportion of those already employed in Georgia are growing restless."
(December 3)

"If Georgia could legally substitute a private school plan for the present public school system, would it prevent whatever economic losses would result from the closing of public schools? Not very noticeably, considering comments on a significant proportion of the questionnaires ..."
(December 4)

- 0 -

"'Georgia has been dropped from a list of potential plant sites by a major electronics manufacturer,' says a business research

Insert:

"The Five Heroes of Little Rock" by Alistair Cooke. from the Manchester Guardian Weekly. 2/19/59. To be found under Educ. L.R. 1959 (Feb).

Civil Liberties 1959

Civil Liberties
The New Republic
5/11/59

The Right To Read

TO MOST PEOPLE in this country, censorship is only a wartime memory. Yet within recent weeks, two protests lodged against current censorship of incoming printed matter as foreign propaganda—one in the form of a resolution by the Associated Church Press and one in the form of a court case filed by the American Civil Liberties Union—have provided a rude reminder that it remains a contemporary practice.

Here is how today's censorship works: On arrival, publications are opened for inspection by the Restricted Merchandise Division of the Bureau of Customs, acting on authority of Section L (J) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, supplemented by an opinion of the Attorney General of 1940, which gives the Bureau the right to destroy material whose publisher is not in compliance with the Act. A publisher is non-compliant as an unregistered foreign agent, the agent of a foreign principal, not an American citizen, not in the jurisdiction of the US.

If, upon inspection, the Customs officials regard the contents of the mail as possibly subject to this Act, they turn it over to the Division of Mail Restriction of the Post Office Department. If they judge it to contain propaganda, POD Form 2154-X then goes out to the addressee, announcing the arrival, addressed to him, of "certain publications which contain foreign propaganda as defined in the Foreign Agents Registration Act." He is further informed that "such matter ordinarily would be treated as non-mailable," but a postcard (Form 2153-X) is enclosed, to be returned by the addressee, on which a printed list enables him to declare that the material is "not for dissemination" and that he (a) has ordered, (b) has subscribed to or (c) desires to receive this material. When thus signed for by the addressee, the documents are forwarded, bearing a rubber stamp of one of the three offices—New York, Chicago, San Francisco—where these activities are centralized.

Most, but not all, of the mail held up under this procedure originates in Communist-bloc countries. Two kinds of organizations are frequent addressees: universities and church groups with affiliated memberships on a world-wide basis. According to customs officials, all universities receive publications addressed to them at once; individuals and other organizations are checked to see whether they may be disseminators of political propaganda not registered as foreign agents.

Church sources have recently made two moves to challenge the system. In March, the executive of a prominent interdenominational organization whose members had repeatedly received postcards regarding mailings from church groups abroad, requested an interview with Postmaster General Summerfield to discuss the situation. To date, no interview has materialized; but the holding up of publications abruptly ceased two days after the request was registered.

Then the first week in April, the 40th annual meeting of the Associated Church Press—a group representing some 160 Protestant publications—adopted a resolution expressing "concern and protest over the tendency of

Civil Lib 159

New York University Law Review
5/1959 Volume 34 - No. 5

Civil Liberties
1959

RACIAL INTEGRATION AND ACADEMIC FREEDOM

PART II

A STUDY BY THE ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS MEMORIAL FUND, NEW YORK UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW

Part I of this article, published in the April issue, discussed the constitutionality of Louisiana legislation that aims at restricting the freedom of school teachers to speak about integration and to associate with groups that seek to speed that process. Part II looks to the question of what judicial procedures and affirmative remedies are available, both at state and federal levels, for the protection of these liberties. Attention is focused on the ability of affected or interested parties to attack the governmental restraints offensively by seeking declaratory judgments and equitable relief.

I

IN THE STATE COURTS

A. Amenability of the State to Suit

SINCE strong constitutional bases exist upon which to challenge the validity of the removal provisions of Act 249, it is necessary to determine whether appropriate proceedings can be commenced in the Louisiana courts to prevent their enforcement. We will be concerned with actions against those responsible for effectuation of the removal provisions—the school boards and their members.[1]

Louisiana strongly adheres to the principle of the sovereign im-

---

[1] As amended, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 17:443 (Supp. 1958) now reads:

"A permanent teacher shall not be removed from office except upon written and signed charges of willful neglect of duty, or incompetency or dishonesty, or of being a member of or of contributing to any group, organization, movement or corporation that is by law or injunction prohibited from operating in the state of Louisiana, or of advocating or in any manner performing any act toward bringing about integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of higher learning of the state of Louisiana, and then only if found guilty after a hearing by the school board of the parish or city, as the case may be, which hearing may be private or public, at the option of the teacher. At least fifteen days in advance of the date of the hearing, the school shall furnish the teacher with a copy of the written charges. The teacher shall have the right to appear before the board with witnesses in his behalf and with counsel of his selection, all of whom shall be heard by the board at the said hearing. Nothing herein contained shall impair the right of appeal to a court of competent jurisdiction.

"If a permanent teacher is found guilty by a school board, after due and legal hearing as provided herein, on charges of willful neglect of duty, or of competence, or dishonesty, or of being a member of or of contributing to any group, organization, movement or corporation that is by law or injunction prohibited from operating in the state of Louisiana, or of advocating or in any manner performing any act toward bringing about integration of the races within the public school system of the state of Louisiana, and ordered removed from office, or disciplined by the board, the teacher may, not more than one year from the date of said finding, petition a court of competent jurisdiction for a full hearing to review the action of the school board, and the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm or reverse the action of the school board in the matter. If the finding of the school board is reversed by the court and the teacher is ordered reinstated and restored to duty, the teacher shall be entitled to full pay for munity of the state from suit.[2] As the Louisiana Supreme Court has said, "there are no exceptions to the immunity of the State from suit without its consent."[3]

School boards in Louisiana are classified as state agencies[4] and the legislature has granted them the power to sue and be sued.[5] In addition, a 1950 Louisiana statute provides that the "right of appeal" of a teacher disciplined or dismissed upon a determination of guilt after a hearing by the school board, is not impaired.[6] This "appeal," or right to petition a court of competent jurisdiction for review and reinstatement, has been construed as an ordinary suit against the school board.[7]

But on November 6, 1956, the people of the State of Louisiana adopted an amendment adding section 26 to article 19 of the state constitution.[8] This section withdraws the state's consent to "suits or legal proceedings" brought against specified state agencies, including school boards and boards of education. Expressly excepted from the operation of the amendment are "suits for the enforcement of contracts . . . or for the recovery of damages for the breach thereof." The amendment reserves to the legislature the power "in individual cases" to grant the right to sue these boards.[9]

The first question presented is whether the "appeal" provision of Act 249 constitutes the necessary consent to suit or whether it was abrogated by this amendment to the constitution, and thereby rendered ineffectual in the absence of legislative consent subsequent to the effective date of the constitutional provision. The case of Stephens v. Natchitoches Parish School Bd.,[10] decided by a Louisiana court of appeal in 1957, is the only Louisiana case in which section 26 of article 19 has been discussed. By analogy, it could be applicable to the present problem.

The plaintiff, relying upon a resolution adopted by the legislature at the 1956 session granting the consent of the state to the suit, commenced a wrongful death action against the school board. The trial any loss of time or salary he or she may have sustained by reason of the action of said school board."

---

(Emphasis added to provisions inserted by La. Acts Reg. Sess. 1956, No. 249.)

[2] Cobb v. Louisiana Bd. of Institutions, 229 La. 1, 85 So. 2d 10 (1955); La. Const. art. 3, § 35.

[3] Cobb v. Louisiana Bd. of Institutions, 229 La. at 5, 85 So. 2d at 11.

[4] La. Rev. Stat. § 17:51 (1950). See Stephens v. Natchitoches Parish School Bd., 96 So. 2d 396, 398 (La. App. 1957).

[5] La. Rev. Stat. § 17:51 (1950).

[6] La. Rev. Stat. § 17:443 (Supp. 1958).

[7] Houeye v. St. Helena Parish School Bd., 220 La. 252, 257, 56 So. 2d 413, 415 (1951).

[8] La. Acts Reg. Sess. 1956, No. 613.

[9] La. Const. art. 19, § 26 (Supp. 1958).

[10] 96 So. 2d 396 (La. App. 1957).

court sustained a defense of no cause of action based upon the constitutional immunity provision, and dismissed the suit. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the constitutional amendment did not withdraw the consent of the state to this suit. The court said that:

> Irrespective of the broad and apparently all-inclusive language of . . . [the amendment] in withdrawing the consent of the State theretofore given, it does not appear that it was intended to nullify bills which were then being currently considered and adopted in the same session of the Legislature. We cannot attribute to the Legislature the intention of doing a vain and useless thing. We cannot conclude it was the intention of . . . [the amendment] to withdraw the consent of the State in an action ex delicto, which consent had heretofore been given by a special act of the Legislature.[11]

The holding would seem to indicate that legislation permitting suit against the state, enacted at the 1956 regular session prior to proposal of the amendment, was not superseded by section 26 of article 19. By analogy it could be contended that Act 249, which reenacted and amended the removal and appeal provisions of section 17:443, was not affected by the later amendment to the constitution, since both were passed by the legislature during that same session. The statutory "right of appeal" would then still exist and might be utilized as a means of attacking the constitutionality of Act 249.

The difficulty with this argument is that the reasoning in the Stephens case depends upon a strained interpretation of section 26. The clear words of the amendment appear to leave no room for the construction resorted to in that case. "When a law is clear and free from all ambiguity, the letter of it is not to be disregarded, under the pretext of pursuing its spirit."[12] The pertinent phrases of section 26 are:

> The consent of the State of Louisiana to suits or legal proceedings against any of the . . . agencies, (however heretofore given) is hereby expressly withdrawn and no such suit or proceeding shall be permitted except as provided in this section. This withdrawal of consent to suits . . . shall apply not only to . . . [those] filed in the future but also to any pending suits or legal proceedings . . . . [T]he Legislature . . . may, in individual cases, by appropriate act grant to any party . . . the right to sue any of these special agencies . . . . This Section shall be self-operative and shall supersede any other portion of this Constitution or any statutes or regulations in conflict herewith.[13]

It seems apparent that on the effective date of the constitutional provision,[14] all prior consent to suits against the named agencies, in-

---

11 96 So. 2d at 399-400.

12 La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 13 (Dart 1947).

13 La. Const. art. 19, § 26 (Supp. 1958).

14 December 11, 1956. See La. Acts, Reg. Sess. 1956, Const. Amdts. 1956.

cluding the school boards, other than in contract actions, was abrogated.[15] Besides, the legislature did not enact the constitutional amendment, but merely proposed it. It was adopted by vote of the people of the state. Both the act involved in the Stephens case and Act 249 were passed by the legislature and became effective prior to the date on which the legislature passed the joint resolution proposing the constitutional amendment.[16] The court of appeal, in deciding the Stephens case, admitted that "the provisions relative to the withdrawal of consent is [sic] concededly very broad,"[17] but found that legislative intent modified the broad expression included in the amendment. Yet, as the Louisiana Supreme Court has said, "in construing the language of the Constitution every expression is deemed—more surely than are the expressions in the acts of the Legislature—to have been chosen carefully and used advisedly."[18]

Regardless of the intent ascribed to the legislature, the unambiguous words of the constitution should govern, particularly since a constitutional amendment is authoritatively adopted by the electorate, not by the legislature. In addition, nowithstanding its possible intent in reference to wrongful death actions, there is evidence that the legislature did intend the constitutional amendment to abrogate any right to proceed against the school boards, where the action concerns any of the aspects of segregation.[19]

At the time the constitutional amendment was proposed, suits to annul or prohibit action taken to enforce segregation had been commenced against various administrative boards in Louisiana. A list of the boards involved in these actions is similar to the list of boards named as agencies of the state by the constitutional amendment.[20] In addition, prior to the passage of the constitutional amendment, a school board had been unsuccessful in a federal court in defending a suit in-

---

[15] La. Civ. Code Ann. arts. 22, 23 (Dart 1942) provides that laws may be repealed wholly or partly by other laws and that this repeal may be either express or implied.

[16] La. Const. art. 19, § 26 (Supp. 1958) (adopted November 6, 1956, effective date December 11, 1956); La. Acts Reg. Sess. 1956, No. 249 (approved July 8, 1956, effective date August 1, 1956). See Stephens v. Natchitoches Parish School Bd., 96 So. 2d 396 (La. App. 1957).

[17] 96 So. 2d at 399.

[18] State ex rel. Milling v. Louisiana Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 154 La. 752, 760-61, 98 So. 175, 178 (1923).

[19] See Ludley v. Board of Supervisors, 150 F. Supp. 900, 902 (E.D. La. 1957), aff'd, 252 F.2d 373 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 819 (1958).

[20] See La. Attorney General, [1956-1957] Biennial Report, Schedule D—"Law Suits Prosecuted and Defended and Other Legal Proceedings Affecting the State's Policy of Segregation of the Races in All its Aspects . . . ," which lists seventeen such actions against school boards and other administrative agencies. Cf. La. Const. art. 19, § 26 (Supp. 1958).

volving segregation where it contended that as an agency of the state, it was within the principle of the immunity of the state to suit.[21]

It follows from this analysis that the reasoning of the Stephens case is inapplicable to the problem at hand and that statutory review under Act 249 may be denied to the teacher who has been disciplined or dismissed by a school board in proceedings under that act.

However, it is not advisable to give a categorical answer to whether or not an appeal is available. The courts, in appeals under Act 249 occurring subsequent to the passage of the constitutional amendment, have neither mentioned nor applied it.[22] It is significant that these cases did not involve matters concerning the problems of maintaining segregation.

The question remains as to whether or not a teacher may have an action for breach of contract against the school board, since such actions are exempted from the operation of the constitutional amendment. Written contracts for "regular and permanent teachers," though not mandatory,[23] may be required by the board.[24] Moreover, oral employment contracts may exist, and are enforceable.[25] Additionally, it might be possible to imply a contract of employment from the fact of appointment of a teacher to his position, performance of duties, and acceptance of such performance by the school board.[26] If a dismissed school teacher brought an action against a school board for breach of an express or implied term contract of employment and the board set up as a defense the violation of those parts of Act 249 under con-21 Bush v. Orleans Parish School Bd., 138 F. Supp. 336 (1956), aff'd, 242 F.2d 156 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 354 U.S. 921 (1957). In Ludley v. Board of Supervisors, 150 F. Supp. 900 (E.D. La. 1957), aff'd, 252 F.2d 373 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 819 (1958), the defendant board raised the defense of state immunity, relying specifically on section 26. The federal district court rejected this contention as a matter of federal law.

---

22 Fields v. Rapides Parish School Bd., 231 La. 914, 93 So. 2d 214 (1957); Verret v. Calcasieu Parish School Bd., 103 So. 2d 560 (La. App. 1958), an action for reinstatement claiming violation of La. Rev. Stat. § 17:443 (1950). See also Steer v. Orleans Parish School Bd., 92 So. 2d 128 (La. App. 1957), where a tort action authorized by La. Acts Reg. Sess. 1954, No. 594, was dismissed on other grounds. This latter action was clearly barred by La. Const. art. 19, § 26, and was not within the Stephens rule since the legislative authorization was enacted in a prior session of the legislature.

23 La. Rev. Stat. § 17:413 (1950). Prior to 1948, written contracts of employment were required of all teachers. La. Acts Reg. Sess. 1922, No. 100, § 49, amended by La. Acts Reg. Sess. 1948, No. 353, § 1.

24 State ex rel. Cody v. Caldwell Parish School Bd., 215 La. 645, 41 So. 2d 461 (1949). See La. Rev. Stat. § 17:83 (1950), § 17:81 (Supp. 1958).

25 La. Civ. Code Ann. arts. 1761-62, 1764, 2277 (West 1952); La. Code Prac. Ann. arts. 14, 26, 29, 33-39 (Dart 1942). La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 2277 (West 1952) requires that oral contracts for the payment of money in excess of $500 be proved by at least one credible witness and other corroborating circumstances.

26 Cf. Burk v. Livingston Parish School Bd., 190 La. 504, 182 So. 656 (1938). See La. Civ. Code Ann. arts. 1761, 1811, 1816, 1926-27 (West 1952). See generally Annot., 127 A.L.R. 1298, 1334 (1940).

sideration, the question of their unenforceability on constitutional grounds would be a litigable and material issue in the action.

Recovery, however, in an action for breach of contract would be limited to damages.[27] Moreover, the provision for reinstatement provided in Act 249, even if assumed to be incorporated into the contract, could not be effectuated in an action for breach of an employment contract. Such relief would be in the nature of specific performance of a contract for personal services, and is not obtainable in Louisiana.[28] If the statutory action for reinstatement and back pay is prohibited by the constitutional amendment, reinstatement may be secured, if at all, only in a mandamus proceeding.[29]

With the exception of the effect which the possible availability of a breach of contract action might have on the availability of other remedies, such action is of little significance to this study, as the primary concern is the availability of affirmative remedies, and not compensatory relief after enforcement of Act 249. Determination of the availability of affirmative relief, or relief obtained prior to the imposition of sanctions under Act 249, involves consideration of actions for injunctions and declaratory judgments and for the writs of mandamus. The availability of these remedies also depends, in part, upon the effect of the constitutional amendment.

The general rule is that the state's immunity from suit does not extend to the protection of public officers from suits to enjoin them from the threatened enforcement of invalid laws.[30] Louisiana law is in accord with this principle. Carso v. Board of Liquidation of State Debt[31] was a taxpayers' suit to enjoin the board from transferring money under authority of a statute alleged to be unconstitutional. The board contended that this was a suit against the state and thus barred. The Louisiana Supreme Court affirmed the granting of an injunction. In disposing of the defense of sovereign immunity to suit, the court said that "such a suit is not a suit against the state . . . if the [27] Cf. La. Civ. Code Ann. arts. 1926-27, 2749 (West 1952).

---

[28] Ibid. See generally Simpson, Contracts § 153 (1954).

[29] Cf. State ex rel. Fields v. Rapides Parish School Bd., 227 La. 290, 79 So. 2d 312 (1955); State ex rel. Nobles v. Bienville Parish School Bd., 198 La. 688, 4 So. 2d 649 (1941). Contra, State ex rel. Eberle v. Orleans Parish School Bd., 221 La. 243, 59 So. 2d 177 (1952); Houeye v. St. Helena Parish School Bd., 213 La. 807, 35 So. 2d 739 (1948). These latter cases are no longer applicable if the statutory review of La. Rev. Stat. § 17:443 (1950) is not now available.

[30] Ex Parte Young, 209 U.S. 123 (1908); Orleans Parish School Bd. v. Bush, 242 F.2d 156, 161 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 354 U.S. 921 (1957); Abelson's Inc. v. New Jersey State Bd. of Optometrists, 5 N.J. 412, 75 A.2d 867 (1950). Cf. State ex rel. McEnery v. Nicholls, 42 La. Ann. 209, 7 So. 738 (1890); Omes v. Department of Conservation, 187 So. 342 (La. App. 1939).

[31] 205 La. 368, 17 So. 2d 358 (1944).

defendant, state official or state agency, is proceeding in violation of law . . . ."[32]

It follows that, so far as sovereign immunity is concerned, a suit could be maintained to enjoin action by school board members on the ground that they are about to exercise their authority in an unconstitutional manner.[33] The suit is in reality one against the members of the board in their individual capacities, since they are threatening unconstitutional action and therefore are about to act beyond the scope of their authority. The action of the board members is thus stripped of its official character and the suit to enjoin this action is not a suit against the state.

An action for a declaratory judgment to declare that the board cannot constitutionally enforce the statute would similarly not be an action against the state.[34] The suit would be one to determine the validity of action under Act 249 as compared to the permitted exercise of lawful authority under the state and federal constitutions.

This brings us finally to a consideration of whether a petition for mandamus can be considered an action against the state. Since the purpose of such a proceeding is to compel a state official to perform a ministerial duty which does not call for an exercise of discretion, such action would not appear to be a suit against the state. The official is regarded as acting in his individual capacity in failing to act according to law.[35] In other words, a suit to compel an officer to do that which the law requires him to do is not a suit against the state.[36]

However, in State ex rel. McEnery v. Lanier a mandamus proceeding to compel a state official to act directly contrary to a duty imposed by an allegedly unconstitutional statute was held to be an action against the state over which the courts have no jurisdiction unless the state consents.[37] The decision appears to be incorrect since it is based

---

[32] Id. at 372, 17 So. 2d at 360.

[33] See Ewell v. Board of Supervisors, 234 La. 419, 100 So. 2d 221 (1958). This was an action to enjoin the issuance of bonds, attacking the constitutionality of a resolution of the board. La. Const. art. 19, § 26(6), listing this board as an agency of the state and withdrawing consent to suit, was not mentioned. Cf. Park Place Ass'n v. New Orleans City Park Improvement Ass'n, 102 So. 2d 521 (La. App. 1958).

[34] Cf. Ludley v. Board of Supervisors, 150 F. Supp. 900 (E.D. La. 1957), aff'd, 252 F.2d 373 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 819 (1958).

[35] State ex rel. Brenner v. Noe, 186 La. 102, 171 So. 708 (1936); State ex rel. Nunez v. Baynard, 15 So. 2d 649 (La. App. 1943).

[36] Cf. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Audubon Park Comm'n, 99 So. 2d 920 (La. App. 1958), where a mandamus action brought after the effective date of the amendment against an agency included within La. Const. art. 19, § 26 was allowed. The court here held that the defendant commission was not an agency of the state for purposes of the Civil Service Law. No mention was made of either La. Const. art. 19, § 26, or consent to suit.

[37] 47 La. Ann. 110, 16 So. 647 (1895).

on a misapplication of the case of Louisiana v. Jumel.[38] In the Jumel case, a holder of Louisiana bonds brought a mandamus action in federal court to force the state treasurer to pay interest on the bonds from a fund created under a provision of an early state constitution which had been abolished by a later constitution. The United States Supreme Court held this to be a suit against the state over which it had no jurisdiction, since the relief requested would require the officials to disobey the express orders of the supreme political power of the state.[39]

Clearly, the courts of Louisiana are controlled by the state constitution, as that is the source of all their power, and they cannot require action in violation of its provisions. But the courts are not so controlled by an act of the legislature. Therefore, mandamus to compel an official to act contrary to an allegedly unconstitutional statute would not be requiring him to act with court approval in violation of the constitution, but rather in conformity with it, and hence should not be classified as an action against the state. In fact, one of the principal functions of the judiciary is to determine whether an enactment is constitutional and valid or unconstitutional and void. Nevertheless, the Lanier case is still good law, and results in the elimination of mandamus as a method of challenging unlawful legislation in the Louisiana courts.[40]

After a judicial determination either that action under Act 249 is unconstitutional or that the act is invalid on its face, negating action taken thereunder, a mandamus proceeding compelling reinstatement could be permitted,[41] even under the Lanier rule. The writ would not be utilized to challenge the constitutionality of the act, but merely to compel the school board and its members to fulfill the duties required by it, as construed in the prior judicial proceeding.[42] Used in this manner, the mandamus proceeding should not be considered an action against the state.

Prior to 1944 reinstatement could be effected by mandamus.[43] In 1944 an amendment to the statute setting forth the procedure for removal of teachers spelled out in more detail the relief available following dismissal.[44] As a result mandamus could be used to reinstate a

---

38 107 U.S. 711 (1883).

39 Id. at 721.

40 See Sachse, Justice—the Duty of the State to Submit to Legal Process, 18 La. L. Rev. 437, 442 (1958).

41 Cf. State ex rel. Fields v. Rapides Parish School Bd., 227 La. 290, 79 So. 2d 312 (1955).

42 Constitutionality of Act 249 may be determined in actions for breach of contract, declaratory judgments and injunctions.

43 Gassen v. St. Charles Parish School Bd., 199 La. 954, 7 So. 2d 217 (1942); State ex rel. Penny v. Rapides Parish School Bd., 1 So. 2d 334 (La. App. 1941).

44 La. Acts Reg. Sess. 1944, No. 250, as amended, La. Acts Reg. Sess. 1946, No. 297.

dismissed teacher only if the procedures of dismissal—written charges, etc.—had not been followed.[45] Reinstatement upon other grounds had to be by court review, since the statutory remedy was available.[46]

If the appeal and reinstatement provisions have been invalidated by Section 26 of Article 19 of the Louisiana Constitution, it seems reasonable to assume that mandamus may again be used for reinstatement purposes following procedural and substantive errors in dismissal proceedings.

In summary, the adoption in 1956 of the constitutional amendment withdrawing the state's consent to suits against its school boards has had several results. The statutory remedy, previously available to teachers who had been disciplined or dismissed, has been abrogated, unless the doubtful reasoning of the Stephens case[47] is applied or the amendment overlooked, as it has been in other cases brought against school boards.[48] Since actions for breach of contract were excluded from the operation of section 26 of article 19, teachers under contract with the school boards may still sue for a breach thereof. As injuctions and declaratory judgment proceedings against public officers threatening enforcement of invalid laws are not considered actions against the state, these proceedings may still be brought. Thus, the constitutionality of Act 249 may be litigated in contract, injunction, and declaratory judgment actions.

Although a petition for mandamus—in its previously indicated limited use—is not considered an action against the state, this proceeding may not be utilized to challenge the constitutionality of statutes. Such an action would not be available in the present situation until the invalidity of Act 249 had been tested and/or established.

B. Declaratory Judgment and Injunctive Relief

It is common practice in Louisiana to seek injunctive relief coupled with declaratory judgment proceedings.[49] Therefore, these remedies will be considered concurrently.

Prior to 1948 in Louisiana the courts were without judicial power to render declaratory judgments or advisory opinions.[50] In 1948 the

---

45 State ex rel. Fields v. Rapides Parish School Bd., 227 La. 290, 79 So. 2d 312 (1955).

46 See Houeye v. St. Helena Parish School Bd., 213 La. 807, 35 So. 2d 739 (1948).

47 Stephens v. Natchitoches Parish School Bd., 96 So. 2d 396 (La. App. 1957).

48 See note 22 supra.

49 See, e.g., City of New Orleans v. Board of Supervisors, 216 La. 116, 43 So. 2d 237 (1949); City of New Orleans v. Borey, 52 So. 2d 728 (La. App. 1951). See also La. Rev. Stat. § 13:4238 (1950): "Further relief based on a declaratory judgment or decree may be granted whenever necessary or proper." Cf. Borchard, Declaratory Judgments 433 (2d ed. 1941).

50 City of Alexandria v. Wilks, 18 So. 2d 341, 344 (La. App. 1944).

legislature enacted the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act whose purpose is to provide a speedy remedy, in cases of actual controversy, for determining issues and adjudicating the legal rights, duties or status of the respective parties, before controversies with regard thereto lead to the repudiation of obligations, the invasion of rights, and the commission of wrongs.[51] Since the act has not been utilized in many decisions, resort must be made to cases of other jurisdictions. This is quite proper in view of the statute, which states that the act "shall be interpreted and construed so as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law of those states which enact it, and to harmonize, as far as possible, with federal laws and regulations on the subject of declaratory judgments and decrees."[52] The obligation to harmonize declaratory judgment decisions has been recognized by the Louisiana Supreme Court.[53]

An injunction is defined by the Louisiana Code of Practice as being "a mandate obtained from a court, by plaintiff, prohibiting one from doing an act which he contends may be injurious to him or impair a right which he claims."[54] The basic requisite for the issuance of an injunction is the need to preserve the status quo in order to prevent irreparable injury.[55] An adequate and specific remedy at law must be unavailable.[56] The issuance of an injunction is normally within the discretion of the trial judge.[57]

1. Standing

The Louisiana courts, in deciding whether a person has a right to bring a proceeding to enjoin action under an unconstitutional statute, have indicated that the litigant must be within the provisions of the statute under attack so as to be affected by it, and that there must be an actual personal right to be vindicated or a wrong to be redressed under its provisions.[58]

---

[51] La. Rev. Stat. §§ 13:4231-46 (1950). Cf. Gary v. Marquette Cas. Co., 72 So. 2d 619 (La. App. 1954).

[52] La. Rev. Stat. § 13:4245 (1950).

[53] See Tugwell v. Members of the Bd. of Highways, 228 La. 662, 679-80, 83 So. 2d 893, 899 (1955).

[54] La. Code Prac. Ann. art. 296 (Dart 1942). See also La. Code Prac. Ann. arts. 209, 209.1 (Dart 1942).

[55] Rapides Dairy Dealers' Co-op. Ass'n v. Mathews, 158 So. 247 (La. App. 1935). "An irreparable injury is one for which the party injured cannot be compensated adequately in damages, or for which the damages cannot be measured by a pecuniary standard," City of Lake Charles v. Lake Charles Ry., 144 La. 217, 221, 80 So. 260, 261 (1918).

[56] La. Code Prac. Ann. art. 303 (Dart 1942). See also Leidenheimer v. Schutten, 194 La. 598, 194 So. 32 (1940).

[57] Cf. Drew v. Town of Zwolle, 185 La. 867, 171 So. 59 (1936); Palama v. Livaudais, 179 La. 201, 153 So. 691 (1934); Brooks v. Chinn, 52 So. 2d 523 (La. App. 1951). (All cases involving preliminary injunctions.)

[58] State ex rel. Kemp v. City of Baton Rouge, 215 La. 315, 40 So. 2d 477 (1949); Vander Sluys v. Frinfrock, 158 La. 175, 103 So. 730 (1929).

For a person properly to seek a declaratory judgment, there must be a dispute or controversy over some matter or right in which the opposing parties have an interest. This is a jurisdictional requirement.[59] Although "controversy" is a broad term,[60] a grant or refusal of declaratory relief is purely a matter of judicial discretion.[61] The danger sought to be avoided must not be too remote, and it must flow from some tangible act or threat calculated, in the view of the court, to arouse justifiable apprehension, fear, and danger of legal injury.[62] Therefore, in order to determine whether these actions may be maintained to challenge the validity of the statute under consideration, it is necessary to consider, in relation to each of the affected persons or classes of persons, whether they are within the provisions of the statute, what is the nature of the injury involved, and whether other adequate remedies are available.

The statute is directed against the teacher. His rights obviously could be considered as injuriously affected by the mere existence of the law, since it has the effect of restraining him from exercising his rights of freedom of speech and association.

Since the effectuation of the allegedly unconstitutional grounds for removal would involve administrative action and attendant expenditure of public funds, it is also possible that the expenditures involved would confer standing upon a taxpayer to seek these remedies. The taxpayer has standing to enjoin the expenditure of public funds under an allegedly unconstitutional statute, since the Louisiana Supreme Court in Graham v. Jones[63] has said that the taxpayer has a direct interest in seeing that taxes paid are devoted to the ends provided by law. The fact that the taxpayer's interest may be small does not deprive him of the right to sue for an injunction, since "the action is regarded as having a public character, and as being a proceeding in which the public complains."[64] Although the taxpayer must show that his tax burden will be increased as a result of the legislation in question, the Louisiana Supreme Court has also held that:

> He is not required to set forth with mathematical certainty his injury. It is sufficient for him to allege a state of facts necessary leading to the conclusion that the unlawful act of which he complains will injuriously affect him or his property.[65]

---

59 State v. Board of Supervisors, 228 La. 951, 958, 84 So. 2d 597, 600 (1955).
60 In re Cooper, 57 So. 2d 775, 776 (La. App. 1952).
61 See State v. Board of Supervisors, 228 La. 951, 958, 84 So. 2d 597, 600 (1955).
62 Borchard, Declaratory Judgments 54 (2d ed. 1941).
63 198 La. 507, 531, 3 So. 2d 761, 769 (1941).
64 Id. at 530, 3 So. 2d at 768.
65 Donaldson v. Police Jury, 161 La. 471, 480, 109 So. 34, 37-38 (1926).

Borden v. Louisiana State Board of Education[66] was a suit by citizens and taxpayers to enjoin the Board of Education from providing free school books out of tax money, alleging that such action was unconstitutional. The supreme court held that the taxpayers had a sufficient interest and right of action, although it refused to grant an injunction. While the taxpayer may not claim the rights of a third person in order to maintain a right of action,[67] he may show the effect of the statute on others since the taxpayer's injury arises from the unauthorized expenditure and not from the effects of the statute. In Stewart v. Stanley,[68] a situation analogous to that here postulated, Louisiana taxpayers were held to have the right to maintain an action to enjoin the State Legislative Crime Committee from expending public funds to hold an investigation, alleging that the statute authorizing the expenditure was unconstitutional. The court took care to point out that the plaintiffs were "interested only as taxpayers seeking to restrain the illegal expenditure of public funds."[69]

The cases considered have dealt only with injunctive relief afforded taxpayers. However, the lack of cases under the Louisiana Declaratory Judgments Act dealing with the standing of taxpayers to seek declaratory judgments does not rule out the applicability of the principles governing standing of taxpayers seeking injunctions. A taxpayer would have a right of action for a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief with regard to Act 249, providing he could show that, in fact, expenditure of public funds was intended and threatened in order to effectuate the allegedly unconstitutional provisions of the act. He would have no other adequate remedy at law, and his irreparable injury as a taxpayer through the illegal expenditure of public funds should be sufficient to give him standing to seek these remedies at the proper time.

The lack of an infringement upon any constitutional right of a student or parent of a student would deny them the standing necessary to seek a declaratory judgment and injunction. Deprivation of the constitutional rights of others is not a sufficient ground for standing.[70] A student, however, doubtless suffers some injury if his teachers are

---

[66] 168 La. 1005, 123 So. 655 (1929).

[67] Whitney Nat'l Bank v. Little Creek Oil Co., 212 La. 949, 33 So. 2d 693 (1947). Cf. State v. Standard Oil Co., 188 La. 978, 1010, 178 So. 601, 611 (1937): "It is not sufficient that the statute is unconstitutional as to other persons or classes of persons; it must affirmatively appear that the person attacking the statute comes within the class of persons affected by it." See also Rawlee v. Jefferson & Plaquemenes Drainage Dist., 187 La. 891, 175 So. 610 (1937); Morris v. Municipal Gas Co., 121 La. 1016, 46 So. 1001 (1908).

[68] 199 La. 146, 5 So. 2d 531 (1941).

[69] Id. at 177, 5 So. 2d at 541.

[70] Ricks v. Department of State Civil Serv., 200 La. 341, 376, 8 So. 2d 49, 60 (1942).

restrained by a statute from discharging their curricular responsibilities fully and freely. New ideas, thoughts, reflections—considerations that are to activate and stimulate the student's intelligence, curiosity and critical awareness—are part of the service the teacher is to deliver to the student. In this sense, the injury to teachers might effect injury to students. Moreover, the parents of the students would have standing to assert their children's rights. Relief upon such grounds has been obtained in Louisiana. In Herold v. Parish Board of School Directors,[71] parents obtained injunctive relief prohibiting the reading of the Bible at the beginning of the school day, on the grounds of an infringement upon the children's religious rights as guaranteed by the Louisiana constitution.

It is difficult, however, to find any constitutional right of the student or parent of a student that has been curtailed by Act 249. It can be argued that the validity of the legislation may be attacked on the ground that it conflicts with the state constitutional provisions relating to the establishment of a public school system.[72] However, impairment of the "right" of education, or the effectiveness thereof, as a result of a denial of the constitutional rights of teachers, seems too tenuous to justify standing. Such a contention would be highly abstract, and claims of such a character are not fit subjects for declaratory judgment determinations in Louisiana.[73]

2. Ripeness

Louisiana cases give no definite answer to the question of the possibility of successful institution of proceedings prior to any action on the part of the school board for removal of a teacher under Act 249. One case has stated that in order to raise a constitutional question an attempt to enforce the contested provision must be in process.[74] Yet injunctive relief has been afforded litigants where only intended action was involved. In Carso v. Board of Liquidation of State Debt, admission by the board members of an intention to make contested appropriations or transfer of money was sufficient to permit litigation of the question whether or not the legislation under which the board proposed to act was unconstitutional.[75] The Carso case is distinguishable

[71] 136 La. 1034, 68 So. 116 (1915).

[72] La. Const. art. 12, §§ 1-24 (1955).

[73] Tugwell v. Members of the Bd. of Highways, 228 La. 662, 679, 83 So. 2d 893, 899 (1955).

[74] Ricks v. Department of State Civil Serv., 200 La. 341, 8 So. 2d 49 (1942) (injunction sought testing constitutionality of state civil service law).

[75] 205 La. 368, 17 So. 2d 358 (1944) (injunction issued to restrain board from intended transfer of state money to state agencies). Accord, Herold v. Parish Bd. of School Directors, 136 La. 1034, 68 So. 116 (1915) (injunction issued to restrain intended reading of Bible at commencement of school day).

from the present situation in that there the intended action of the board was of a more certain nature than would be the action of the board in threatening to "enforce" the removal provisions of Act 249, as the school board can hardly be said to intend to enforce the removal provisions of Act 249 unless someone allegedly violates them.

City of New Orleans v. Borey[76] is also relevant in probing the question of when a challenge to an allegedly unconstitutional act becomes "ripe." Action was instituted to declare unconstitutional state legislation giving legislators parole powers. It was alleged that such powers violated rights of the municipality and were in contravention of constitutional provisions. It was further alleged that the legislators had exercised these parole powers, and that police officers had honored such exercise due to the heavy penalties involved for failure to do so. The court stated that the only apparent remedy of the city was to seek to enjoin the enforcement and test the constitutionality of the act, "otherwise, the city would have to await a violation of the statute by one of its officers before the issue could be raised . . . ." (Emphasis added.)[77] The crucial factor in the holding that the issue of unconstitutionality was ripe for review prior to any actual exercise of the statute was that the city could not violate the statute and would have to suffer the inconveniences it alleged until such time as one of its police officers violated the statute. This precedent is not applicable to the case of a teacher challenging Act 249, for the teacher may by an actual violation raise at any time the issue of constitutionality. Absent such violation, the Louisiana courts may decline to consider the question as "ripe."

The precedents of both the Carso and Borey cases are more applicable to the situation of a taxpayer seeking to challenge Act 249 than that of a teacher. Like the city in the Borey case, a taxpayer would have no way to test the validity of the act until an actual violation by a teacher, unless declaratory relief is available prior to such a violation. However, a distinction remains in that the taxpayer's injury is only the "threat" of the expenditure of state funds to enforce an unconstitutional statute if it were violated. In the Borey case the city alleged that the statute presently interfered with the proper administration of its affairs and enforcement of local ordinances. Thus the "injury" to the city would be of a more certain nature than the "injury" to the taxpayer in the present situation, prior to attempted enforcement of the removal provisions.

An examination of other state and federal cases does not conclusively resolve the question of "ripeness." In the case of United Public Workers v. Mitchell,[78] the United States Supreme Court dealt with a situation analogous to the one at hand. The Hatch Act makes it unlawful for federal employees with the exception of the President, Vice-President and certain policy performing officers to "take any active part in political management or in political campaigns," although it provides that they "shall retain the right . . . to express their opinions on all political subjects and candidates."[79] A number of government employees brought suit to enjoin the Civil Service Commission from enforcing the provisions of the act and for a declaratory judgment that the act was invalid. The Court upheld the act, but granted "standing" only to an employee who had already violated it. Even though the other employees had stated that they desired to engage in political activities, the Court held that they had no justiciable interest: "A hypothetical threat is not enough."[80] The dissent of Mr. Justice Douglas seems as appropriate to the situation of the teacher challenging Act 249 as it was with respect to the public official challenging the Hatch Act.

[76] 52 So. 2d 728 (La. App. 1951).
[77] Id. at 732.

> [T]o require these employees first to suffer the hardship of a discharge is not only to make them incur a penalty; it makes inadequate, if not wholly illusory, any legal remedy which they may have. Men who must sacrifice their means of livelihood in order to test their rights to their jobs must either pursue prolonged and expensive litigation as unemployed persons or . . . seek employment in other fields. . . . [For many] the burden of taking that course is irreparable injury.[81]

The case of Adler v. Board of Education,[82] is also analogous to the situation presented. In that case the New York Civil Service Law[83] authorized disqualification for, and removal from, state jobs for advocacy of forceful overthrow of the government. The Feinberg Law of 1949[84] directed the Board of Regents to adopt regulations for the enforcement of these provisions and to list organizations, membership in which would be held prima facie evidence for the disqualification. Prior to the commencement of any action by the Board of Regents, a proceeding for an injunction and declaratory judgment was commenced in the New York courts by parents, teachers and taxpayers alleging the unconstitutionality of the law. The trial court, on the pleadings, held that the Feinberg Law provisions were unconstitutional.[85]

---

78 330 U.S. 75 (1947).
79 53 Stat. 1147, § 9 (1939), 5 U.S.C. § 118i(a) (1950).
80 United Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U. S. 75, 90 (1947).
81 Id. at 117-18 (dissent).
82 342 U.S. 485 (1952).
83 N.Y. Civ. Serv. Law § 12-a (1946).
84 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1949, ch. 360.
85 Lederman v. Board of Educ., 196 Misc. 873, 95 N.Y.S.2d 114 (Sup. Ct. 1949),

On the question of standing, the court held that only the taxpayers had a litigable interest. By statute,[86] taxpayers in New York are authorized to maintain an action to prevent waste of the city's money.[87] Since effectuation of the Feinberg Law would require expenditure of public funds, the taxpayers could maintain an action to prevent the expenditure of the funds for unconstitutional purposes. Although it indicated its inclination to recognize a justiciable interest in the teachers, the trial court found itself bound by the rule in United Public Workers v. Mitchell[88] and held that there was no justiciable controversy as to them until the law had been violated.

Subsequent appellate decisions in New York[89] were silent on the issue of standing, as was the majority opinion of the Supreme Court.[90] However, in a dissenting opinion, Mr. Justice Frankfurter said that standing should have been denied to the petitioners alleging interests as taxpayers, as parents, and as teachers.[91] By implication, this dissent seems to infer that the Supreme Court granted standing to the other classes. But standing was not granted to either the parents or the teachers as litigants, and was accorded only to those petitioners alleging interest as taxpayers. Not only were the taxpayers alone able to proceed in the New York courts, but only the taxpayers prosecuted the appeal before the Supreme Court.[92]

Thus, consideration of the rights of the teachers was only incidental to the Supreme Court's determination of the validity of the act and the soundness of the taxpayers' contention that public funds would be appropriated and utilized for an unconstitutional purpose.

Other state courts have given varying interpretations as to when an issue is "ripe" for determination. At one extreme is De Cano v. State.[93] Here a corporation composed of native Filipinos, which owned no land and had no option to purchase land, was held by the Washington Supreme Court not entitled to challenge the constitutionality of an rev'd, 276 App. Div. 527, 96 N.Y.S.2d 466 (2d Dep't), aff'd sub nom. Thompson v. Wallin, 301 N.Y. 476, 95 N.E.2d 806 (1950), aff'd sub nom. Adler v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 485 (1952).

86 N.Y. Munic. Law § 51 (1954).

87 Lewis v. Board of Educ., 258 N.Y. 117, 120, 179 N.E. 315, 316 (1932).

88 330 U.S. 75 (1947).

89 Lederman v. Board of Educ., 276 App. Div. 527, 96 N.Y.S.2d 466 (2d Dep't), aff'd sub nom. Thompson v. Wallin, 301 N.Y. 476, 95 N.E.2d 806 (1950).

90 Adler v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 485 (1952). See also Note, The Supreme Court and Standing to Sue, 34 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 141, 145-47 (1959).

91 Id. at 501-04 (dissent).

92 See Briefs and Record on Appeal, Statement as to Jurisdiction, p. 9, Adler v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 485 (1952). See also Brief for Appellant, pp. 2, 3; Brief for Appellee, p. 2.

93 7 Wash. 2d 613, 110 P.2d 627 (1941).

anti-alien land law, notwithstanding the fact that one of its purposes was to acquire land for a clubhouse. Other states have, however, permitted an attack upon the constitutionality of a statute and construction of legislation without requiring an act in violation thereof. In Maguire v. Monaghan[94] the suit was instituted by attorneys who wished to determine by construction of a statute whether they might render certain legal services without bringing into operation the automatic forfeiture of public office as provided for by the statute. The New York trial court stated that "it would appear reasonable and appropriate to invoke the remedy of a declaratory judgment before the happening of an event that would imperil the [attorney's] office."[95] In Hyde Park Dairies, Inc. v. City of Newton[96] the petitioner was denied a license to deliver milk within the city. In permitting the attack upon the validity of the statute under which the license was denied, the Kansas court held that:

> It has long been settled courts also have jurisdiction, under the declaratory judgment act, to determine the validity of statutes or ordinances before a party undertakes to act in apparent violation thereof. That is the purpose and intent of the remedial relief contemplated by the act.[97]

Other cases have even allowed challenge of the constitutionality of statutes not in effect at the time of the commencement of proceedings. Thus, in Department of Financial Institutions v. General Finance Corp.,[98] the statute, not in effect at the time of suit, was one regulating the sale and assignment of retail installment contracts. In declaring the act unconstitutional, the Indiana court recognized the prospective injury to the plaintiff, who was engaged in purchasing and selling these contracts. In Acme Finance Co. v. Huse[99] the statute at issue regulated the business of making small loans. The plaintiff was in such business, and alleged that the regulatory act was unconstitutional and would unlawfully infringe upon his property rights. The Washington court held the statute invalid. Recognizing the predicament of the plaintiff and interveners, it allowed them to initiate proceedings for declaratory relief.

> If, on the one hand, they complied with the act . . . , and the act was, in fact, unconstitutional, they would do so to their damage. If, on the other hand, they refused to comply with the law, and they were wrong in thinking it unconstitutional, they would suffer the criminal penalties

---

94 206 Misc. 550, 134 N.Y.S.2d 320 (Sup. Ct. 1954).
95 Id. at 554, 134 N.Y.S.2d at 325.
96 167 Kan. 730, 208 P.2d 221 (1949).
97 Id. at 731, 208 P.2d at 224.
98 227 Ind. 373, 86 N.E.2d 444 (1949).
99 192 Wash. 96, 73 P.2d 341 (1937).

> provided in the act. Either course was fraught with danger. To afford relief to parties in such a situation is the very purpose of the declaratory judgment act.[100]

The Louisiana teacher is in a similar predicament.

The principles enunciated in the Maguire, Hyde Park, Huse, and Financial Institutions cases would all lend some support to a conclusion that declaratory and injunctive relief may be commenced prior to a breach of the removal provisions of Act 249. Yet each of these cases may be distinguished, in one degree or another, from the situation of the teacher prior to an "advocacy of integration" or some action falling within the proscriptions of the allegedly unconstitutional grounds for dismissal. The Maguire case involved the construction of a statute as opposed to a test of the legislature's power to pass it. A consideration of the facts of the Hyde Park, Huse, and Financial Institutions cases justifies some distinction as to the preciseness, certainty, and impact of the application of the contested legislation in these cases, as opposed to the situation obtaining under Act 249.

Perhaps the case closest to the situation of those affected by Act 249 is Huntamer v. Coe.[101] Plaintiffs alleged their desire to become candidates for public office. The contested Washington statute provided that no person could become a candidate for election unless he had filed an affidavit that he was not a subversive person as defined in the act. It was recognized that the Secretary of State would require the execution of these affidavits in connection with the filing of declarations of candidacy. The plaintiffs stated that they would be prevented from becoming candidates for the respective offices because they could not or would not execute the oath or affidavit proposed by the Secretary of State as they interpreted and understood it and its affect. There had been no breach of the statute involved and no action thereunder. There is no meaningful distinction between this case and the one of a teacher prior to enforcement of Act 249. The act at issue in the Huntamer case denies the acquisition of a certain status unless an act is performed. Act 249 denies the retention of a certain status unless certain acts are avoided. This is not a persuasive distinction. It is true that the action required in the Huntamer case is of a more certain nature than the actions denied under Act 249. This is but a difference in degree, and of no determinative significance with regard to the "denial of advocacy," "act toward integration," and "contributions to organizations prohibited or enjoined from operating within the state." In Huntamer the Washington Supreme Court approved the assumption of jurisdiction by the trial court "because of the particular circumstances in this case, involving as they do some questions of considerable public interest and importance."[102] In addition, the court quoted with approval the following statement:

---

100 Id. at 108, 73 P.2d at 346.

101 40 Wash. 2d 767, 246 P.2d 489 (1952).

> A petition for a declaratory judgment is particularly appropriate to determine the constitutionality of a statute, when the parties desire . . . a speedy determination of the public interest involved therein.[103]

The Huntamer case is adequate support for allowing the institution of proceedings prior to a supposed breach of Act 249.

A codraftsman of the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act has suggested that the nature of the statute largely determines when its constitutionality may be tested. If it is mandatory and requires little, if any, fact finding prior to its enforcement, and its incidence upon the plaintiff is apparent, enacting suffices to create ripeness for decision. If, on the other hand, the scope and effect of the statute are left to administrative regulations or discretion, it may be necessary to await the regulation or exercise of discretion before the effect upon the plaintiff is known.[104] Act 249 presently impinges upon constitutional freedoms of the teacher, and little discretion lies with the board in implementing the dismissal features provided. If the declaratory judgment is for the purpose of providing a speedy remedy for determining issues before controversies with regard thereto lead to the commission of wrongs, the Louisiana teacher seems fully qualified to presently institute such an action.

In view of the status of the case law on the subject, and the lack of a Louisiana case squarely supporting such an inference, there is some doubt that a teacher or a taxpayer could successfully commence a proceeding to obtain declaratory and injunctive relief prior to the service of written charges by the school board. Balancing judicial temperament and the strength of a constitutional attack upon the face of certain sections of Act 249 against the environment in which the Louisiana courts sit, the odds are only slightly in favor of a successful commencement in such a case.

3. Availability and Adequacy of Other Judicial Remedies as Bars to Relief

In Burton v. Lester the Supreme Court of Louisiana held that courts should refuse applications for declaratory relief when there is an action presently pending in another forum considering the determina-

---

102 Id. at 770, 246 P.2d at 491.
103 Id. at 771, 246 P.2d at 492.
104 Borchard, Declaratory Judgments 63 (2d ed. 1941).

tion of the question sought by the declaratory judgment.[105] The court's dictum expressed that the declaratory judgment should not be employed "as a substitute for the well-defined actions provided for in our Code of Practice or those which have been established by jurisprudence unless, by reason of the special circumstances of the case, the codal procedure does not furnish an adequate remedy."[106]

This opinion might preclude a petitioner from instituting declaratory proceedings when another remedy existed, and would deny such proceedings when the same matter was under litigation in another forum. Regarding the former, the dictum in Burton v. Lester has been criticized.[107] In has been stated that this rule is unsound and upon analysis of applicable cases, contrary to the weight of authority.[108] This position of the Louisiana Supreme Court has apparently been subject to different interpretations by the courts of appeal of the same state, adding to the uncertainty of the status of the law in this regard. In Gary v. Marquette Casualty Co., the court disallowed a declaratory proceeding regarding compensation, interpreting the Workmen's Compensation Act to deny such an action.[109] Yet the court stated, "if the remedy sought were not expressly forbidden by the said Act, we believe that petitioner could have proceeded under the Declaratory Judgments Act even though an additional remedy were provided by the compensation act."[110] (Emphasis added.) Five months later, in Hastings v. McDowell, the court disallowed declaratory proceedings involving the determination of an interest in property, on the ground that the status of the property could be determined after a seizure under final process, and such remedy was not supplemented by the declaratory judgment statute.[111] In addition, the court stated that relief would not be granted under a declaratory judgment unless "there is no other adequate remedy."[112] This apparent contradiction may be explained by the nature of the subject matter of the latter case. An interest in real property was involved, and the court apparently intended to announce that real actions were the only proper ones to decide interests in property.

Perhaps this narrow view of the availability of declaratory proceedings when another remedy is available would be confined to actions

---

105 227 La. 347, 79 So. 2d 333 (1955) See also Theodos v. Bossier City, 232 La. 1059, 95 So. 2d 825 (1957).

106 Burton v. Lester, supra note 105, at 353, 79 So. 2d at 335.

107 See McMahon, Civil Procedure, 17 La. L. Rev. 379, 382-85 (1956).

108 Ibid. See also Note, 14 La. L. Rev. 281 (1953).

109 72 So. 2d 619, 620 (La. App. 1945).

110 Id. at 622 (dictum).

111 75 So. 2d 383 (La. App. 1945).

112 Id. at 385.

involving real property. Even if this rule were not so interpreted, it would not be of any significance in the present situation. If relief is sought prior to service of written charges upon the teacher, there is no other remedy of any sort available, since the school board is empowered only to hear the charges and effect the action it chooses.[113] If proceeding are commenced subsequent to receipt of charges, the problem then is whether the administrative remedy has been exhausted and not whether another legal remedy is available. These considerations are also applicable to the question of the adequacy of legal remedies insofar as the availability of injunctive relief is concerned.

4. Administrative Remedy as a Bar to Relief

Oftentimes judicial relief will be denied when an administrative remedy is available or has been commenced. If relief may be sought prior to the institution of school board proceedings, this problem may be avoided altogether. Act 249 does not provide any administrative proceeding for testing its validity.[114] In addition, there is support for the proposition that deciding the constitutionality of the act under which it operates is beyond the scope of the school board's authority.[115] If the teacher has been served with written charges, as required under the act, the exhaustion of administrative remedies poses a more difficult problem. There would then, however, be no doubt that the issue of the constitutionality of the considered grounds for removal of Act 249 would be "ripe" for determination. The taxpayer could then successfully institute proceedings, since no administrative remedy is available to him. But what of the teacher?

Must the teacher resort to the school board proceedings? It has been argued that "if the question is one of law or of the jurisdiction of the commission, it may be judicial economy and wisdom to decide the issue by declaration before the administrative channel has been invoked or exhausted."[116] But "the doctrine of exhausting the administrative remedy before relief can be sought from the courts is well recognized in . . . [Louisiana]."[117] It is generally accepted that resort to administrative procedures is necessary when the agency is to determine complex and technical matters of fact. Act 249 leaves fact finding of a sort to the school board, but not of very complex or technical matters.

---

113 See La. Rev. Stat. § 17:443 (Supp. 1958).

114 Ibid.

115 See Dore v. Tugwell, 228 La. 807, 84 So. 2d 199 (1955); State v. Heard, 47 La. Ann. 1679, 18 So. 746 (1895). See also Datio v. Ford Motor Co., 314 Mich. 152, 159, 22 N.W.2d 252, 255 (1946).

116 Borchard, Declaratory Judgments 342-44 (2d ed. 1941).

117 O'Meara v. Union Oil Co., 212 La. 745, 755, 33 So. 2d 506, 509 (1947). Accord, Shreveport Laundries, Inc. v. Southern Cities Distrib. Co., 176 La. 994, 147 So. 56 (1933); Feinblum v. Louisiana State Bd. of Optometry Examiners, 97 So. 2d 657 (La. App. 1957).

Such fact finding does not require any technical competence of ability. If the charges are sustained, the board is seemingly compelled either to discipline or dismiss the teacher. In some Louisiana cases, the courts have recognized that the exhaustion doctrine is not absolute. Judicial action may be invoked in extreme cases where irreparable injury would result,[118] or where the commission, by its action, ignores some fundamental right or invades some constitutional guarantee.[119] In addition, it has been tacitly recognized that exhaustion of the administrative remedy is not necessary where it would be inadequate, or when the agency's action is unconstitutional.[120]

The dismissal of a teacher under the provisions of Act 249 would seem to be unconstitutional.[121] The teacher cannot effectively raise constitutional questions before the school board. If disciplined or dismissed, the teacher, under the most probable situation, has no right of appeal, whereby he might challenge the validity of the act. If dismissed because of the "advocacy" or "act toward integration" features of Act 249, such would indeed be a burden to bear. In this light, the administrative remedy is inadequate. "Irreparable injury" may be incurred if dismissed for the previously mentioned "integration" segments of the act. It seems reasonable to assume that, in addition to other adverse results, employment would be difficult to obtain if the seeker were an "advocate of integration."

The United States Supreme Court has declared statutes unconstitutional without requiring the plaintiff to exhaust his administrative remedy, reasoning that the issue was a constitutional one which the administrative agency could hardly be expected to entertain.[122] There are, however, Supreme Court decisions to the contrary.[123] One authority on this subject recognizes the confusion surrounding it, but believes that future challenges of the constitutionality of statutes will be less likely to be forced through the "exhaustion" doctrine where the chances are slight that administrative action will dispose of the case.[124] State courts have held a declaratory judgment to be appropriate for the determination of a question of law before the administrative procedure has been invoked or completed.[125]

---

118 O'Meara v. Union Oil Co., supra note 117, at 756, 33 So. 2d at 510 (dictum).

119 Porter v. O'Neal, 205 La. 445, 450-51, 17 So. 2d 622, 623 (1944) (dictum).

120 See Feinblum v. Louisiana State Bd. of Optometry Examiners, 97 So. 2d 657, 662-63 (La. App. 1957).

121 See Racial Integration and Academic Freedom, 34 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 725, 749 (1959).

122 Public Utils. Comm'n v. United States, 355 U.S. 534 (1958). Accord, Township of Hillsborough v. Cromwell, 326 U.S. 620 (1946).

123 Allen v. Grand Central Aircraft Co., 347 U.S. 535 (1954); Aircraft & Diesel Equip. Corp. v. Hirsch, 331 U.S. 752.

124 3 Davis, Administrative Law § 20.04 (1958).

125 Union Pac. R.R. v. Bean, 167 Ore. 535, 119 P.2d 575 (1941). Accord, Opdyke v.

As this doctrine of "exhaustion" is one of self-restraint imposed by the court, it is within its discretion to allow the commencement of judicial relief. In view of the Louisiana courts' recognition of the qualifications on the exhaustion of administrative remedies, the existence of liberal decisions concerning this principle with regard to its application where questions of law are concerned, and the apparent lack of a statutory appeal, such doctrine should not bar relief insofar as a test of Act 249 is concerned.

If a declaratory and injunctive action is not obtained prior to a dismissal by school board action, declaratory relief still has a purpose to serve. Assuming, as seems likely, that the statutory appeal no longer remains, there would be no reason not to permit the commencement of an action seeking a declaratory judgment. If successful, the judgment could be used as the basis for reinstatement by mandamus, as previously discussed.

C. Conclusion

Any unequivocal statement would be doubtful as to the points of time at which a teacher or taxpayer may successfully institute an action for affirmative judicial relief in the state courts in order to strike down the allegedly unconstitutional provisions of Act 249. No Louisiana cases are directly in point.

The greatest lack of state legal authority is with regard to the likelihood of successful institution of proceedings prior to an alleged breach of the act. All factors considered, the odds are in favor of the achievement of such an undertaking. Enunciated principles with regard to "ripeness" and the purposes of declaratory relief and the public importance of the question lend support to this position. There is no significant difference between the positions of the teacher and taxpayer in this respect. The teacher is restrained in the exercise of his constitutional rights of freedom of speech and association. The taxpayer suffers the threat that state funds will be spent to effectuate the allegedly unconstitutional provisions of Act 249. This threat is quite real since it can quite properly be assumed that the school board is going to carry out the demands of the act upon it. The taxpayer has no way of violating the statute in order to "ripen" the case, and if action by the school board is awaited, some state money will have been expended before relief is sought.

Following the service of written charges by the school board, the case is quite strong, if not conclusive, that the parties may initiate proceedings. This is supported by federal and other state authority and by principles stated by the Louisiana judiciary regarding the inapplicability of the exhaustion of administrative remedies doctrine in certain situations. At best guess, there is no statutory appeal from the board's action. Therefore, if the actions do not lie at this point, there is no opportunity for the teacher to test the constitutionality of the questioned grounds for dismissal—the crux of his case—until the termination of the hearings, and then only by declaratory proceedings. It would thus be pointless to deny to the teacher the right to seek the relief that may be obtained following the hearings. Plainly, if the teacher's complaint is framed in terms of an attack upon the face of Act 249 or upon the written charges of the school board, the "exhaustion" doctrine should not come into play at all. If any section of Act 249 is void on its face, there would be no valid action of any sort that the board could effectuate under its terms. Therefore, no need exists for permitting the board to continue its proceedings. The same conclusion follows if the issue framed by the complaint is that the charges of the board cannot constitutionally be grounds for dismissal. The case is even stronger for the taxpayer, who has no relief at all following the board proceedings. By that time the state funds will have been used for their supposedly unconstitutional purpose.

---

Security Sav. & Loan Co., 59 Ohio L. Abs. 212, 97 N.E.2d 435 (C.P. 1950), aff'd, 59 Ohio L. Abs. 257, 99 N.E.2d 84 (Ct. App. 1951), aff'd, 157 Ohio St. 121, 105 N.E.2d 9 (1952).

II

In the Federal Courts

A. Amenability of the State to Suit—The Eleventh Amendment

The eleventh amendment,[126] while seemingly only a bar to the jurisdiction of the federal courts in certain cases, in effect establishes the sovereign immunity of states to suits commenced or prosecuted against them without their consent in federal courts by a citizen of another state. It is also clear that the eleventh amendment bars federal jurisdiction in a suit against a state by one of its own citizens,[127] by a corporation chartered by the federal government,[128] and by a foreign government.[129]

In the federal courts there has been a great amount of inconsistency in determining whether or not a suit against an official acting unlawfully will be barred by the eleventh amendment. Deviation from

---

[126] "The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State."

[127] Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1 (1890).

[128] Smith v. Reeves, 178 U.S. 436 (1900).

[129] Monaco v. Mississippi, 292 U.S. 313, 329 (1934).

the doctrine of sovereign immunity, as Justice Frankfurter succinctly phrased it, results > from an unexpressed feeling that government immunity runs counter to the prevailing notions of reason and justice. Legal concepts are then found available to give effect to this feeling, and one of its results is the multitude of decisions in which this court has refused to permit an agent of the government to claim that he is pro tanto the government and therefore sheltered by its immunity.[130]

It was not very long after the passage of the eleventh amendment that the question arose as to whether a suit against a government official is a suit against the state. In Osborn v. The President, Directors & Co. of the Bank of the United States,[131] Ohio had passed an extremely heavy tax on the United States bank, which obtained an injunction in federal court to restrain the enforcement of the statute on grounds of its unconstitutionality. In violation of the injunction, a state official entered the branch office of the bank and seized a sum of money which was turned over to the state treasurer in payment of the tax. A supplemental bill was then filed against the state auditor and state treasurer to compel them to restore the wrongfully appropriated funds to the bank. The Court held that this was not an action against the state, since the jurisdictional bar of the eleventh amendment applies only where the state is a party to the record.

This artificial conceptualization, which had the effect of virtually nullifying sovereign immunity, quickly disappeared into limbo. The final push was applied in the 1887 case of In re Ayers,[132] which propounded the current doctrine that the court will look behind the nominal parties on the record to ascertain who are the real parties to the suit. But the Osborn dictum which established the doctrine that an unconstitutional act is a nullity that can afford no protection to the officers who execute it, has had continued vitality. The Ayers case, which at first blush seemed to eliminate the escape hatch provided by Osborn, did not have this effect. After Virginia statutes attempting to repudiate state debts were held unconstitutional, the state enacted legislation requiring officials to bring summary proceedings against taxpayers who attempted to pay taxes with coupons issued for that purpose by the State. The statute allowed the taxpayer to recover only after meeting an extremely heavy burden of proof as to the genuineness of the coupons. The United States Supreme Court held that an injunction against the state attorney general to prevent the commence-130 Larson v. Domestic & Foreign Commerce Corp., 337 U.S. 682, 709 (1949) (dissent).

---

131 22 U.S. (9 Wheat) 738 (1824).

132 123 U.S. 443 (1887).

ment of suits under the allegedly unconstitutional statute would indirectly compel specific performance of the state's contracts, so that the suit was one against the state and barred by the eleventh amendment. But in reconciling this case with Osborn and other earlier decisions,[133] it made clear that sovereign immunity would not be a bar where, in acting under an unconstitutional statute, an official had wrongfully taken or withheld property. This requirement of tortious action on the part of an official was gradually abandoned by a number of decisions involving unreasonable regulation of utilities.[134]

In 1908, in the leading case of Ex parte Young,[135] a federal court, at the suit of railroad stockholders, had issued a preliminary injunction against Young, the Attorney General of Minnesota, to prevent him from enforcing a Minnesota rate statute which was alleged to be unconstitutional. On the day following the issuance of the injunction, Young brought mandamus to compel the railroads to file their rates as required by the statute. He was thereupon adjudged in contempt. Young's principal contention in the Supreme Court was that this was a suit against the state and thus prohibited by the eleventh amendment. After holding that the statute was unconstitutional, the Court proceeded to consider the issue of whether its jurisdiction was barred. It held that an officer in attempting to enforce an invalid enactment which threatens to deprive the individual of his property rights in violation of the Constitution is doing an illegal act for which his official character affords no protection. In effect, "he is stripped of his official or representative character and is subjected in his person to the consequences of his individual conduct." In other words, the suit is brought to enjoin the individual wrong and is not a suit against the state within the meaning of the eleventh amendment. It is certain that the Court was fully aware that the state was actually the real party defendant in the case because the point was discussed forcefully by Mr. Justice Harlan in dissent.[136] Ex parte Young has had continued vitality in a long series of cases, most of which have involved suits to protect property rights against allegedly unconstitutional statutes.[137]

---

133 Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U.S. 270 (1884); United States v. Lee, 106 U.S. 196 (1882). The Lee case contains a thorough exposition of the preexisting law on the subject.

134 See Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U.S. 516 (1899) (a suit to restrain prosecutions by state officials is a suit against the state, thus returning to the Ayers doctrine); Smyth v. Ames, 169 U.S. 466 (1898) (similar dictum); and Reagan v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 154 U.S. 362 (1894) (dictum would allow suit against state officer enforcing unreasonable rates).

135 209 U.S. 123 (1908).

136 Id. at 174 (dissent).

137 The most recent reaffirmations of the Ex parte Young doctrine by the Supreme

But the doctrine has had many recent applications in cases involving threatened invasions of personal liberties.

A decision by the Fourth Circuit in 1956[138] involved an action in behalf of Negro school children to enjoin school boards and division superintendents of schools from enforcing school segregation in violation of rights of the petitioners under the fourteenth amendment. One of the principal contentions raised by the defendants on appeal was that this was a suit against the state prohibited by the eleventh amendment. The school boards argued that the doctrine of Ex parte Young was applicable only to individuals and could not be applied to corporate agencies of the state which cannot operate in other than an official capacity.[139] The court disposed of this attempt to distinguish Ex parte Young and concluded that "a state can act only through agents; and whether the agent be an individual officer or a corporate agency, it ceases to represent the state when it attempts to use state power in violation of the Constitution," and thus may be enjoined from so doing.[140] The court had no express authority for this extension of the Ex parte Young doctrine, but relied on what it considered to be a necessary implication from the cases decided by the Supreme Court in Brown v. Board of Education.[141] The reasoning of the majority was that the Supreme Court (in Brown) would not have enjoined school boards acting as state agencies if the eleventh amendment precluded such action. This, of course, does not necessarily follow since the eleventh amendment issue was not raised in Brown. However, the Fourth Circuit apparently felt it undesirable that the Ex parte Young doctrine be rendered a practical nullity by such a restrictive application.

Two recent cases in which the constitutionality of Louisiana legislation was being adjudicated saw the defense of the eleventh amendment raised by state officials. In Orleans Parish School Bd. v. Bush,[142] Negro pupils brought suit against the parish school board and others for a declaration that state constitutional provisions and statutes designed to maintain school segregation were invalid, and for an injunction ending segregation. The board argued, in apparent (although tacit) reliance on the case of Louisiana v. Jumel,[143] that a suit to compel official noncompliance with a state constitutional provision was Court were in Georgia R.R. & Banking Co. v. Redwine, 342 U.S. 299 (1952) and Alabama Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Southern Ry., 341 U.S. 341 (1951).

138 School Bd. of the City of Charlottesville v. Allen, 240 F.2d 59 (4th Cir. 1956), cert. denied, 353 U.S. 910 (1957).

139 La. Rev. Stat. § 17:51 (1951) requires that school boards be incorporated.

140 240 F.2d at 63.

141 349 U.S. 294 (1955); 347 U.S. 483 (1954).

142 242 F.2d 156 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 354 U.S. 921 (1957).

143 107 U.S. 711, 721 (1883).

an action against the state.[144] But in Jumel, the action would have resulted in funds being withdrawn from the state treasury,[145] while in the Bush case, as the court pointed out, no action would be required on the part of the state. The decrees did not tell the school board officials how they should perform duties or exercise discretion vested in them by law, but simply prohibited them from discriminating against the plaintiffs or other Negro school children similarly situated in violation of rights protected by the Constitution of the United States.

The following year in Board of Supervisors v. Ludley,[146] the Fifth Circuit was faced with an appeal from a temporary injunction forbidding Louisiana State University to deny admission to qualified applicants because of their failure to obtain a certificate of eligibility. The certificate apparently could not be issued to Negroes without the violation of state law, and it was alleged that the statute requiring the certificate was unconstitutional on its face. Once again the school board raised the eleventh amendment argument, this time relying on the fact that school boards had been made special agencies of the state by the amendment to the Louisiana constitution which had been adopted in 1956, and that such a suit would have been precluded in the Louisiana courts absent the state's consent. However, the court disposed of this argument in a cursory fashion and held that the determination as to whether a suit in a federal court against a state agency is a suit against the state and prohibited by the eleventh amendment is exclusively a federal question.

Another application of the Ex parte Young case which would be determinative of the availability of injunctive relief in federal courts against official action under an unconstitutional statute is exemplified by Ex parte La Prade.[147] A temporary injunction had been issued against the Attorney General of Arizona by a three judge district court, on the petition of certain railroad companies, to enjoin him from enforcing an allegedly unconstitutional statute regulating the maximum length of trains. In the interim, the term of the Attorney General expired, and La Prade took over the office. The petitioner succeeded in having La Prade substituted as defendant for his predecessor in office. Thereupon La Prade applied to the Supreme Court for mandamus to compel the district court to dismiss the suit. In granting mandamus to dismiss the proceeding, the Court carried Ex parte Young to its logical 144 It has been argued that mandamus and injunction are virtually correlative in cases where the official commits or neglects to do an act contrary to law. See Board of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U.S. 531, 541 (1876).

---

145 This was also the rationale of In re Ayers, 123 U.S. 443 (1887).

146 252 F.2d 372 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 819 (1958).

147 289 U.S. 444 (1933).

conclusion. The purpose of the suit was to prevent a wrong about to be committed by a state official who, in enforcing an unconstitutional statute, was stripped of his official character. Since it was not alleged that the present Attorney General threatened or intended to do anything to enforce the statute, and since Arizona did not have any provision for the substitution of officials, an injunction would not lie. However, the Court expressly left unanswered the question as to what kind of threatened act toward enforcement would be required by a successor in office in order that he might be substituted in a pending suit. A recent Alabama case further extended La Prade by holding that although La Prade dealt with the substitution of parties, "the application of the principle discussed therein should apply, a fortiori, to cases of newly instituted suits."[148]

The La Prade doctrine could seemingly provide an excellent dilatory tactic in that, by the substitution of an official, a pending suit could be blocked. Further, it could be argued that, when board personnel were changed, the earlier decision would not be res judicata as to the new members. However, if the school board as a corporation were enjoined, the answer would be that it was a continuing entity in spite of personnel changes, and that no new threat need be made as a condition precedent to injunctive relief.

Ex parte Young has also been rigidly applied by the Supreme Court in dismissing an action in which the petitioner failed sufficiently to specify in his pleadings that an action to enjoin unconstitutional action was against a state officer personally and not officially. Great Northern Ins. Co. v Read,[149] involved an Oklahoma tax statute which provided that an action could be brought against a state official where illegality of the tax was alleged. In compliance with the statutory mechanism, the insurance company had paid the tax under protest of unconstitutionality and brought suit against the officer in federal court to obtain a refund. The Court held that by the terms of the statute, even though it said nothing at all about either federal or state courts, Oklahoma had only consented to suit in its own courts. Thus, because the pleadings did not specify that the suit was against the officer individually, federal jurisdiction was barred by the eleventh amendment.

This decision is subject to criticism on two counts. In the first place, it reaches an "all time maximum of harmful formalism."[150] If a plaintiff brings suit under the state procedural mechanism this will be

---

148 American Fed'n of State Employees v. Dawkins, 104 So. 2d 827, 832 (Ala. 1958).

149 322 U.S. 47 (1944).

150 Davis, Sovereign Immunity in Suits Against Officers for Relief Other Than Damages, 40 Cornell L.Q. 3, 17 (1954). See also the dissent of Justice Frankfurter in Great Northern Ins. Co. v. Read, 322 U.S. 47, 60 (1944).

deemed to be a suit against the state. But if the statute is ignored and an action is brought against the official in his individual capacity for the same injunctive and declaratory relief, the plaintiff will achieve success under the Ex parte Young rationale. Secondly, although on the surface providing a guide for future plaintiffs in spelling out the significant difference between individual and official action, the Court in Read did not provide the verbal formula to prevent the bar of the eleventh amendment from being successfully raised. In two subsequent cases the point has not been clarified.[151]

B. The Cause of Action and Other Jurisdictional Considerations

Since the operative law creating the federal equitable cause of action in Ex parte Young was the fourteenth amendment itself, the reasoning in that case leads to a logical contradiction.[152] The fourteenth amendment states that "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States . . . nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." If an officer acting under an unconstitutional statute is stripped of his official authority, the alleged act cannot be a violation of the fourteenth amendment since it is not state action. Conversely, if deemed to be an act of the state, then the eleventh amendment is a bar. This troublesome dilemma, which was sidestepped by the Court,[153] could have been settled in Ex parte Young by construing the fourteenth amendment as having superseded the eleventh amendment insofar as was necessary for a decision in the case. The dilemma is sharpened if the plaintiff asserts that the statute or action taken thereunder violates state, as well as federal, law.[154]

However, the United States Code provides a statutory basis for the federal cause of action. It reads:

> Every person who, under color of, any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceedings for redress. (Emphasis added.)[155]

---

151 Kennecott Copper Corp. v. State Tax Comm'n, 327 U.S. 573 (1946); Ford Motor Co. v. Department of Treasury, 323 U.S. 459 (1945).

152 See Note, 50 Harv. L. Rev. 956, 960-61 (1937).

153 Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 150 (1908). See also Home Tel. & Tel. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 227 U.S. 278 (1913).

154 Barney v. City of New York, 193 U.S. 430 (1904). Cf. Mosher v. City of Phoenix, 287 U.S. 29 (1932); Siler v. Louisville & N. R.R., 213 U.S. 175 (1909).

155 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (1952) (derived from the Civil Rights Act of 1871).

Section 1983 of title 42 creates the cause of action, and section 1343(3) of title 28 gives the federal district courts original jurisdiction to entertain it and to redress the deprivation.[156]

While a mere violation of state law does not violate the fourteenth amendment,[157] such rights of personal liberty as speech and association (and perhaps all personal rights that are inherently incapable of pecuniary evaluation) are within its ambit and are protected by sections 1983 and 1343(3) against the actions of state officials taken under color of state authority,[158] even though such actions are contrary to state law.[159] It follows that, in the case of all natural persons with standing to attack the Louisiana legislation, federal jurisdiction lies, without the necessity of showing that the monetary minimum of section 1331 of title 28, which gives the district courts general jurisdiction over civil actions arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, is involved.

This is not true, apparently, of corporations that might have standing to attack the legislation. Although the matter is not free from doubt, the prevailing view is that the personal rights of speech and association accrue only to natural persons.[160] Thus, corporations could not invoke federal jurisdiction under section 1343(3) of title 28. They would have to rely on section 1331 and make the requisite showing of monetary involvement.

If it appears from the complaint or the proofs "as a legal certainty that the claim is for less than the jurisdictional amount (more than $10,000), federal jurisdiction under Section 1331 will not lie."[161] However, in an action for a declaratory judgment and an injunction the question is determined by the value of the object to be gained.[162] Failure to prove that the requisite amount of damage has already been

---

156 28 U.S.C. § 1343. "Civil Rights. The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action authorized by law to be commenced by any person: . . . (3) To redress the deprivation, under color of any State law, statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage, of any right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States or by any Act of Congress providing for equal rights of citizens or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States."

157 Snowden v. Hughes, 321 U.S. 1 (1944).

158 Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 518 (1939) (concurring opinion of Stone, J.). See Douglas v. City of Jeannette, 319 U.S. 157 (1943). See also Hart & Wechsler, The Federal Courts and the Federal System 840-42 (1953).

159 Screws v. United States, 325 U.S. 91 (1945).

160 Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 527 (1939) (concurring opinion of Stone, J.). But see Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233 (1936); NAACP v. Patty, 159 F. Supp. 503 (E.D. Va.), prob. juris. noted sub nom. Harrison v. NAACP, 358 U.S. 807 (1958). For a criticism of this doctrine, see McKay, Repression of Civil Rights as an Aftermath of the School Segregation Cases, 4 How. L.J. 9, 21 (1958).

161 Ball v. Preferred Life Assur. Soc'y, 320 U.S. 238 (1943).

162 NAACP v. Patty, 159 F. Supp. 503 (E.D. Va.), prob. juris. noted sub nom. Harrison v. NAACP, 358 U.S. 807 (1958). Cf. Mississippi & M. R.R. v. Ward, 67 U.S. (2 Black) 485 (1863).

sustained will not defeat jurisdiction if the injury is recurrent or continuous, since the advantage to be gained from removal of the restraint is the matter at issue. Thus, if the corporation could show that some loss of revenue had occurred and would continue to occur if the burden of the statute remained, it could invoke federal jurisdiction if the aggregate exceeded 10,000 dollars.

Similarly, a teacher might bring his action under section 1331, if dismissal had been threatened and would, if effectuated, involve a cumulative loss of earnings in excess of 10,000 dollars.[163]

C. Adversary Requirements: Standing and Ripeness

The requirement that there be an actual case or controversy is compelled not only by the language of Article III of the Constitution of the United States but also by policy considerations. First, since precedent has a prospective effect which presumably helps to shape the behavior of the body politic, it can be thought of as essentially legislative in nature. If a court produces such effects gratuitously, i.e., outside the context of adjudication, it offends notions of separation of powers. Second, the rights of future litigants are apt to be prejudiced by the real or supposed precedential effects of abstract determinations. What, for instance, is the stare decisis effect of a decision that a statute is constitutional on its face? Or, more to the point, what assumptions about its effect will members of the community make? Third, the risk that the precedent made by a decision will be ill-considered is increased if an adequate presentation of law and fact is not required. The danger is presented in an acute form in an action for a declaratory judgment brought after the enactment of a statute but before its attempted enforcement because many, if not all, of the facts necessary to a determination of the issue will not have arisen at the time the action is commenced.[164]

These considerations have particular force in cases involving the constitutionality of statutes or their construction where the disposition of the issues will have a significance reaching beyond the adjudication of the rights and duties of the immediate parties. Therefore, the plaintiff, in order to establish the existence of a case or controversy, must allege and be prepared to show exactly what constitutional rights which he

---

[163] Freedman v. International Ass'n of Machinists, 220 F.2d 808 (D.C. Cir. 1955) (suit to enjoin dismissal from union membership; amount in controversy calculated on basis of potential loss of earnings, based on reasonable expectations, from loss of union membership). Cf. Marshall v. Grotty, 185 F.2d 622 (1st Cir. 1950).

[164] See Pugh, The Federal Declaratory Remedy: Justiciability, Jurisdiction, and Related Problems, 6 Vand. L. Rev. 79, 88-96 (1952). See also the concurring opinion of Justice Frankfurter in Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Comm. v. McGrath, 341 U.S. 123, 149 (1951).

has standing to assert are threatened by the statute and in what way and to what extent incursions have been made or are about to be made into those rights.

In the problem at hand, it would seem that the teacher, since he is the person upon whom the statute operates directly, has standing to complain that it abridges his freedom of speech and association and that it is an arbitrary restraint upon public employment. It would be necessary, however, for him to allege and be prepared to prove that, absent the statute, he would engage in speech, maintain organizational affiliations, or do acts which might reasonably be thought to fall under the statutory interdiction. Even then he would run into difficulties. Despite the Supreme Court's silence on the point in Adler v. Board of Education,[165] the case of United Public Workers v. Mitchell[166] still presents formidable obstacles to the plaintiff who wants to satisfy the requirement of ripeness without engaging in the proscribed speech or conduct and provoking at least a threat of enforcement. The complaint and affidavits in the latter case set forth with considerable specificity the conduct in which the plaintiffs intended to engage. Nonetheless, the Court dismissed the action on the ground of lack of case or controversy, since no threat to the plaintiffs existed beyond that implied by the existence of the statute and implementing civil service regulations.

There are two ways in which the teacher might attempt to circumvent the force of the Mitchell precedent. First, he might set forth that the existence of the act has deterred him from saying certain things about integration or joining or remaining a member of particular organizations or supporting particular causes for fear of the statute's broad interdict and punishment under its vague standards, and that he has thereby been deprived of his freedom of speech, freedom of association, and liberty without due process of law. The issue would be: is the act invalid on its face, i.e., not susceptible of constitutional interpretation and application?

The ambiguous language of Act 249 is not only capable of, but virtually demands, the gloss of construction and narrowing application. Indeed, the Attorney General of Louisiana has undertaken this task with respect to that part of the statute that operates on freedom of association.[167]

---

165 342 U.S. 485 (1952).

166 330 U.S. 75 (1947).

167 He has ruled that a permanent teacher must personally perform some act which would manifest an intent to bring about integration. Mere membership in an organization, even if it had failed to file membership lists so that its members were prohibited from holding, assisting in holding, or attending any meeting, would not constitute an act which

However, proof of abuse of power by administering officials is not a requisite for attack on the constitutionality of a statute which licenses the dissemination of ideas.[168]

> It is not merely the sporadic abuse of power by the censor but the pervasive threat inherent in its very existence that constitutes the danger to freedom of discussion. . . . A like threat is inherent in a penal statute, like that in question here, which does not aim specifically at evils within the allowable area of state control but, on the contrary, sweeps within its ambit other activities that in ordinary circumstances constitute an exercise of freedom of speech or of the press. The existence of such a statute . . . results in a continuous and pervasive restraint on all freedom of discussion that might reasonably be regarded within its purview.

Such was the language of the Court in Thornhill v. Alabama, where the defendant, after arrest and conviction under such a statute, was permitted to attack the legislation on its face.[169]

The teacher might argue that since, if he were the defendant in dismissal proceedings for engaging in certain speech or conduct which allegedly constituted "advocating integration," he could raise the constitutionality of the statute as written as a defense, he should be able to raise the issue offensively in an action for a declaratory judgment and an injunction. There are two serious difficulties with this procedure. First, there was no case or controversy problem in the Thornhill case. The statute had actually been enforced against the defendant. Second, considerations of comity did not operate. The highest court of the state had had an opportunity, which it had eschewed, to give the statute a narrow construction.

A more promising tactic would be for the teacher to set forth with particularity the conduct in which he proposed to engage and ask the school board for a ruling as to its legality under Act 249. An adverse ruling or a failure to rule after a reasonable period of time might sufficiently "ripen" the matter to meet the case or controversy requirement. The teacher might then ask for a declaration that the statute could not be constitutionally applied, thus causing him to lose his job for engaging in such conduct. Such particularity of pleading would, of would support such an inference as to intent. However, if the teacher did more than maintain membership in such an organization, e.g., assisted in holding a meeting or attended a meeting at which the case for integration was made, these additional facts might support the inference. La. Attorney General Report and Opinions, May 1956-April 1958, p. 767.

---

168 Staub v. City of Baxley, 355 U.S. 313 (1958); Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296 (1940); Lovell v. City of Griffin, 303 U.S. 444 (1938).

169 310 U.S. 88, 97-98 (1940) (defendant allowed to attack statute on its face). Cf. Winters v. New York, 333 U.S. 507 (1948). But see Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569 (1941).

course, reduce both the res judicata and stare decisis effect of a favorable decision. This could be avoided only by permitting the plaintiff, who had thus "ripened" the controversy as to the narrow issue, to utilize the Thornhill technique and raise the broader issue. It is doubtful that this stratagem would be successful. In Thornhill the issue had been joined in broad terms by the defendant's demurrer to a complaint which charged him in substantially the very words of the statute.[170]

Turning to the question of the ability of a taxpayer to get a determination on the merits, it is unlikely that he would be successful. Adler v. Board of Education[171] points to the opposite conclusion, but it should be noted that in Adler the school board had taken some concrete steps to indicate that it intended to carry out the statutory mandate. This is not true—at least not yet—in the Louisiana situation. Furthermore, Adler was an action originally brought in a state court in which the state accorded the taxpayers standing and treated the matter as ripe for adjudication. It does not necessarily follow that a taxpayer would have had standing to bring an original action in the federal courts.[172] Similarly, the ability of the parents of a student presently in school to meet case or controversy requirements is doubtful. The parents in Zorach v. Clauson[173] were held to have satisfied the requirement, but in Zorach the conduct complained of had occurred by the time that the litigation was commenced.

Furthermore, neither the taxpayer nor the parent or student would have standing to assert the constitutional rights of the teacher. The orthodox doctrine is that only the person whose constitutional rights are "directly" affected has standing to assert them.[174] Exceptions have been made in the unique situation where effective vindication of the rights of the absent party is possible only if the party to the litigation is permitted to assert them.[175] The exception is not applicable to the situation under examination unless teachers have some constitutional right not to reveal their attitudes on the desegregation decisions by bringing litigation in their own behalf. That such a right exists is doubtful, if not fanciful.

The decision in NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson[176] does make 170 Cf. cases collected and discussed in Hart & Wechsler, The Federal Courts and the Federal System 177-80, 189-92 (1953).

---

171 342 U.S. 485 (1952). Compare the Adler case with Doremus v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 429 (1952). See also Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183 (1952).

172 See Coleman v. Miller, 307 U.S. 433, 460 (1939) (concurring opinio furter, J.).

173 343 U.S. 306 (1952).

174 Tileston v. Ullman, 318 U.S. 44 (1943).

175 Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U.S. 249 (1953).

176 357 U.S. 449 (1958).

it clear that persons have some sort of limited right to be secretive about particular organizational affiliations and that the organization has standing to assert that right on behalf of its members. Suppose that an organization to which school teachers belong fails to file membership lists as required by the Louisiana statutes.[177] The Attorney General of Louisiana is directed by law to proceed by injunction to dissolve the organization. Assuming that the organization could invoke federal jurisdiction under Title 28, Section 1331 of the United States Code by alleging a sufficient loss of revenue from dues and contributions, and assuming that the statutory mandate requiring the initiation of dissolution proceedings is sufficiently final to work immediate harm on the group by deterring teachers from becoming or remaining members,[178] the organization might, on the authority of NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson,[179] have standing to seek a declaration that Act 249, because it prohibits school teachers from belonging to groups that do not disclose their membership lists, is an unconstitutional incursion into the teachers' right of anonymous association. The teachers cannot effectively vindicate this right because they will necessarily vitiate it by bringing action on their own behalf.

The argument is unsound if Act 249 is vulnerable to attack by a teacher without the necessity of his revealing particular organizational affiliations. Furthermore, it is doubtful, in light of such cases as Adler v. Board of Education,[180] that a teacher's right to belong to an organization without giving up his job is an interest of such significance that it includes the right of anonymous membership.

While freedom of association, even in nonpolitical and nonreligious groups, is protected by the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment,[181] whether the right has been unconstitutionally invaded depends upon whether the state has established, in the particular case, an interest which justifies the intrusion.[182] This being the test, the validity of a restraint of freedom on association will not be determined abstractly but will depend upon the particularities of a concrete case.

The conclusion has particular force where the legislation merely requires a public employee to choose between membership in a par-

---

177 La. Rev. Stat. §§ 12:401-09 (1950).

178 See Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Comm. v. McGrath, 341 U.S. 123 (1951) and Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925).

179 357 U.S. 449 (1958).

180 342 U.S. 485 (1952).

181 Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516 (1945).

182 NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson, 357 U.S. 449 (1958). See also Bryant v. Zimmerman, 278 U.S. 63 (1928). But see NAACP v. Patty, 159 F. Supp. 503 (E.D. Va.), prob. juris. noted sub nom. Harrison v. NAACP, 358 U.S. 807 (1958).

ticular organization and keeping his job. Since a state may properly inquire into the company that members of a school system keep and may consider those associations in determining fitness for public employment,[183] whether the inferences drawn raise questions of constitutional dimensions depends upon the complex of facts in the particular case. It follows that the matter is not susceptible of abstract adjudication by declaratory judgment.

D. Discretionary Considerations

1. Irreparability of Harm and Adequacy of Other Remedies

Under Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, "the existence of another adequate remedy does not preclude a judgment for declaratory relief in cases where it is appropriate."[184] However, the existence of such a remedy may influence the court's exercise of discretion. Established equitable principles will determine whether a declaratory judgment should issue.[185] It has been suggested that a declaratory judgment should not issue in the absence of a showing of irreparable injury.[186] On the other hand, it has been argued that the discretionary question should be resolved by balancing the convenience to the parties, the public interest in settlement, and the availability and relative ease of other remedies.[187]

Assuming that the plaintiff, whether a teacher or a taxpayer, can satisfy case or controversy requirements, and does not run afoul of other obstacles, he should be entitled to relief under either standard. The restraint, assuming that the controversy has "ripened," is a continuing one as to the teacher. The availability of state remedies at law is clouded with uncertainty and, their adequacy is doubtful, since they would not protect against the damage to reputation and reemployability which dismissal for "advocating integration" would produce. There are no other adequate remedies available to the taxpayer.

The teacher might have an action for damages under the Federal Civil Rights Act,[188] but the remedy hardly seems adequate to redress the harm which would be done to him by dismissal.[189] The measure

---

183 Adler v. Board of Educ., 342 U.S. 485 (1952).

184 Doehler Metal Furniture Co. v. Warren, 129 F.2d 43 (D.C. Cir. 1942). Cf. Chicago Metallic Mfg. Co. v. Edward Katzinger Co., 123 F.2d 518 (7th Cir. 1941); Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Martin, 108 F.2d 824, 828 (8th Cir. 1940); Whitmyer v. Lincoln Parish School Bd., 75 F. Supp. 686 (W.D. La. 1948). See Borchard, Declaratory Judgments 316 (2d ed. 1941).

185 Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co. v. Hoffman, 319 U.S. 293 (1943).

186 Colegrove v. Green, 328 U.S. 549, 552 (1946).

187 See Borchard, Declaratory Judgments 293-314 (2d ed. 1941).

188 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (1952).

189 But see Albert v. School Dist., 181 F.2d 690 (3d Cir. 1950); Reinicke v. Loper, 77 F. Supp. 333 (D. Hawaii 1948).

of damages is that of a tort action, although punitive damages may also be awarded.[190] But the loss of first amendment freedoms is not susceptible to pecuniary evaluation, nor is it likely that damages would adequately compensate the teacher for the private sanctions which would probably be visited upon him. Such a remedy could hardly be said to be plain, adequate, and complete.[191]

The "ripeness" requirement, however, would be a major obstacle in this context. Even where the pleadings might suffice to get a declaratory judgment, equitable relief will not be forthcoming in the absence of a threat of enforcement.[192] Indeed, a declaratory judgment itself may be refused where the state statute that allegedly constitutes an unconstitutional restraint of speech and assembly has not yet been applied or threatened to be applied to the plaintiff in the manner anticipated.[193]

2. Comity in a Federal System

Respect for the state courts as the primary arbiters of questions of state law and the desirability of avoiding gratuitous decisions of issues of federal constitutional law have caused the Supreme Court in a number of cases either to decline to exercise federal equitable jurisdiction[194] or to postpone its exercise.[195] The relinquishment technique is utilized where the questions of state law are complicated and peculiarly local in nature. The technique of postponement, while holding on to the case, has been used where the local courts have not had an opportunity to deal with the question of state law and there are adequate state procedures available for its disposition.

Act 249, to put the matter paradoxically, would seem to involve a local law matter of national significance. Accordingly, postponement, rather than relinquishment, would be the predictable technique, if the doctrine of equitable abstention is invoked at all.

A federal court does not lose jurisdiction simply because the state courts have not had an opportunity to interpret the statute at issue,[196] but postponement of the exercise of jurisdiction is indicated if an authoritative interpretation of state law may avoid the necessity for deciding a federal constitutional question. The federal court may proceed

---

190 Hague v. CIO, 101 F.2d 774 (3d Cir. 1939).

191 Mathews v. Rodgers, 284 U.S. 521 (1932).

192 Cf. Meredith v. Winter Haven, 320 U.S. 228 (1943).

193 Alabama State Fed'n of Labor v. McAdory, 325 U.S. 450, 460 (1945).

194 Alabama State Fed'n of Labor v. McAdory, supra note 193; Burford v. Sun Oil Co., 319 U.S. 315 (1943).

195 City of Meridian v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 79 S. Ct. 455 (1959). Spector Motor Serv., Inc. v. McLaughlin, 323 U.S. 101 (1944).

196 Doud v. Hodge, 350 U.S. 485 (1956).

to the merits if the state statute is not susceptible of an interpretation which would avoid the federal constitutional question.[197]

On this analysis, since Act 249 is characterized by ambiguity and fairly cries out for an interpretation by the Louisiana courts, exercise of federal equitable jurisdiction should be postponed unless either (1) there are no adequate state procedures available or (2) it is not reasonably possible for the statute to be given an interpretation which will make it constitutional. Since the best guess is that both teachers and taxpayers may seek a declaratory judgment and an injunction in the Louisiana courts, equitable abstention should be invoked unless the statute cannot be given a constitutional interpretation. Perhaps Act 249 contains such an unintelligible and sweeping interdiction that it is not savable by judicial construction. But, in the vexed and emotion-charged context of the integration controversy, is it not a wise exercise of discretion to give the Louisiana courts exclusive primary jurisdiction? "[W]hen the state court's interpretation of the statute or evaluation of its validity under the state constitution may obviate any need to consider its validity under the Federal Constitution, the federal court should hold its hand, lest it render a constitutional decision unnecessarily."[198]

E. Conclusion

The case for attempting to utilize state, rather than federal, procedures in order to test the constitutionality of Act 249 by means of an action for a declaratory judgment and injunction seems overwhelming.

The problems of standing and ripeness do not appear to be as formidable in the state courts as they are in the federal courts. Moreover, in the absence of at least a threat of enforcement which would make the controversy lie between the plaintiff and the school board, the eleventh amendment would almost surely preclude federal court jurisdiction. The doctrine of Ex Parte Young opens the federal forum to actions against state officials and perhaps municipal corporations but it does not permit the federal courts to lay hold of disputes with legislatures or statute books.

Finally, as a matter of wisdom as well as precedent, it is doubtful that a federal court would or should decide federal constitutional questions in the absence of an authoritative state court construction of the statute. If the federal court held the cause while the parties repaired to a state tribunal for a declaration of state law, the choice of a federal court as the original forum might cause inordinate and unnecessary delay.[199] Thus, the plaintiff would be well advised to initiate his action in the state court, setting forth both state and federal objections to the constitutionality of Act 249.

---

[197] NAACP v. Patty, 159 F. Supp. 503, 521-22 (E.D. Va.), prob. juris. noted sub nom. Harrison v. NAACP, 358 U.S. 807 (1958). Cf. Browder v. Gayle, 142 F. Supp. 707 (N.D. Ala.), aff'd per curiam, 352 U.S. 903 (1956).

[198] City of Meridian v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 79 S. Ct. 455, 457 (1959).

---

[199] See Spector Motor Serv., Inc. v. McLaughlin, 323 U.S. 101 (1944); Spector Motor Serv., Inc. v. Walsh, 135 Conn. 37, 61 A.2d 89 (1948); Spector Motor Serv. v. O'Connor, 340 U.S. 602 (1951). See also Government & Civic Employees Organizing Comm. v. Windsor, 116 F. Supp. 354 (D. Ala. 1953), aff'd per curiam, 347 U.S. 901 (1954), 262 Ala. 285, 78 So. 2d 646 (1955), 146 F. Supp. 214 (D. Ala. 1956), judgment vacated and case remanded, 353 U.S. 364 (1957).

Legal File
6/2/59

HE NEW YORK TIMES

HIGH COURT VOIDS OUSTER OF 'RISK'

Rules Interior Department Subjected Teacher to a Wide 'Inquisition'

By ANTHONY LEWIS
Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 1—The Supreme Court upset the dismissal of an Interior Department employe today on the ground that the department had violated its own rules designed to assure him "a meaningful, fair, decent and dignified hearing."

Instead of getting that kind of hearing, Justice John Marshall Harlan said, the employe was subjected to "a wide-ranging inquisition into [his] educational, social and political beliefs."

All nine justices agreed that a 1954 dismissal was invalid for that reason. By a vote of 5 to 4, the court held that another action by the Interior Department, in 1956, had also been in- and hence that he was now en- effective to dismiss the employe titled to reinstatement and back pay.

The employe, William Vincent Vitarelli, worked for the department as a teacher on the island of Koror in the Pacific. His salary was $6,140 a year.

Now in Pennsylvania

Mr. Vitarelli now teaches woodwork and other manual arts at a high school in Langhorne, Pa. The back pay he is entitled to will be figured by subtracting what he has been able to earn in the last five years from the $30,000 he would have drawn in the Government. His attorney said today that he would try to get his Government job back.

Mr. Vitarelli had a position in the Interior Department outside the civil service and could have been dismissed for no reason at all. But the department removed him under the security program, charging that he had had Communist associations.

The charges were all denied by Mr. Vitarelli. He had a hearing, but the Government, as in most cases, produced no witnesses. He was held to be a security risk and dismissed.

In 1956 the Supreme Court held that the Government security program covered only sensitive jobs. Since he had had a non-sensitive position, Mr. Vitarelli sued for reinstatement.

At that point the Interior Department expunged the security findings against him. It issued a new discharge paper, dated back to 1954, giving no reason for the ouster.

The Government argued that his rights under departmental security procedures. The lower courts accepted this argument.

The Supreme Court disagreed. Once having invoked its security regulations against Mr. Vitarelli, the court said, the Interior Department was bound to obey those regulations. Justice Harlan said this was especially necessary in security cases, where wiping out the security proceedings against him also wiped out normal procedural safeguards may be lacking.

Justice Felix Frankfurter, who wrote the dissent on the subsidiary issue, "unreservedly" joined in what he termed this "main conclusions" of the majority. He wrote:

"He that takes the procedural sword shall perish with that sword."

The question then was whether the hearing given Mr. Vitarelli was up to Interior Department standards. Justice Harlan found three respects in which it was not.

First, he said, the regulations required the charges to be as specific as security considerations permitted.

But when Mr. Vitarelli got to the hearing, the justice said, he was questioned "in great detail concerning his association with and knowledge of various persons and organizations nowhere mentioned in the statement of charges."

Second, Justice Harlan said, the regulations require that hearings be "orderly" and that "reasonable restrictions be imposed as to relevancy, competency and materiality of matters considered."

These "indispensable" conditions were ignored, the opinion said. It gave numerous examples of questions asked Mr. Vitarelli by J. Reuel Armstrong, a security office who later became solicitor of the Interior Department.

Among them were these:

¶Did Mr. Vitarelli think "maybe Negroes and Jews are denied some of their Constitutional rights?"

¶Had he voted for Norman Thomas and Henry A. Wallace?

¶Was he "quite hepped up over the One World idea?"

Witnesses in Mr. Vitarelli's behalf were asked whether he was "careless with his language around the students or careful," whether he was a "religious man" and whether he was "an extremist on equality of races."

Third, Justice Harlan said the Interior Department regulations contemplated that informants "not properly classifiable as 'confidentail' should be subject to cross-examination.

One informant was named at the hearing, Justice Harlan said, and so was clearly not confidential, but he was not produced.

Even though the opinion was confined to the specific regulations, it has reverberations for all security programs. Many security regulations can be interpreted to require the same standards of fairness laid down for Mr. Vitarelli, but in fact many security hearings are said to have had the same faults found in his case.

The disagreement on the court today was over the significance of the 1956 rephrasing of Mr. Vitarelli's discharge.

Justice Harlan said this was simply an effort to clean up the 1954 ouster, not a new dismissal. Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justices Hugo L. Black, William O. Douglas and William J. Brennan Jr. joined in his opinion.

Justice Frankfurter thought the 1956 action constituted a new and legal summary dismissal as of that date. He said Mr. Vitarelli was therefore entitled only to back pay from 1954 to 1956. With him were Justices Tom C. Clark, Charles E. Whittaker and Potter Stewart.

Clifford J. Hynning argued the case for Mr. Vitarelli and John G. Laughlin for the Government.

Two broad tests of the Government's security program for defense plant workers still await decision by the high court. They raise the question of the constitutionality of the use of confidential informants, a question explicitly avoided by the court today.

6/2/59

Congress Backed on Red Probe

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
JUN 9 1959

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court held Monday a congressional committee has far-reaching authority to investigate Communist activity, including the field of education.

Dividing 5-4, the court said the House Committee on Un-American Activities was acting within the scope of its authority when it questioned a former educator concerning past or present membership in the Communist party.

The majority rejected a wide variety of contentions raised by Lloyd Barenblatt, a former teacher at Vassar College and the University of Michigan. He claimed, among other things, that the resolution setting up the committee was too vague and that under the First Amendment it had no right to investigate his activities or associations.

CONTENTIONS UPSET

Speaking for the majority, Justice John M. Harlan brushed aside all Barenblatt's contentions.

In another major decision Monday, the court ruled 5-4 that its 1956 Smith Act decision in the Steve Nelson case did not bar prosecution under state sedition laws.

The majority said the Nelson decision, widely criticized in Congress and by state attorneys general, merely barred prosecutions in state courts on charges of conspiring to overthrow the government of the United States.

This ruling upheld the contempt conviction of Dr. Willard Uphaus of New Haven, Conn., for refusing to give New Hampshire's attorney general information about the New Hampshire World Federation Center.

CLARK EXPLAINS DECISION

In this case Justice Tom C. Clark spoke for the majority. Justice William J. Brennan wrote a dissenting opinion in which Justice Earl Warren, Hugo L. Black and William O. Douglas joined.

Justice Clark said the Nelson

Continued on Page 9, Column 4

Rights of Red Probers Upheld

Continued From Page 1

decision didn't strip the state of the right to protect themselves.

"All the opinion proscribed was a race between federal and state prosecutors at the courthouse door," Clark wrote. "The opinion made clear that a state could proceed with prosecutions for sedition against the state itself."

In his dissenting opinion Justice Brennan said the Uphaus case involved inquiries into the areas of free speech and assemblage for the purpose of compulsory disclosure.

'Here we must demand some initial showing by the state sufficient to counterbalance the interest in policy as it relates to freedom of speech and assembly," Justice Brennan wrote.

"On any basis that has practical meaning, New Hampshire has not made such a showing here."

New Hampshire Atty. Gen. Louis Wyman demanded a list of guests at the New Hampshire World Fellowship Center. He acted under a legislative resolution empowering him to investigate subversive activities.

Uphaus, director of the center, near Albany, N.H., refused to give the information. He was ordered jailed until he supplied it. However, he was released under bond pending the outcome of his appeal."

In the Barenblatt case, Harlan wrote:

"We conclude that the balance between individual and government interests here at stake must be struck in favor of the latter, and therefore the provisions of the First Amendment have not been offended.'

The four dissenters, for whom Justice Black was the chief spokesman, took the position that the record in the case revealed no purpose for investigating Barenblatt, "except exposure purely for the sake of exposure."

Barenblatt did not invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege aainst possible self-incrimination, relying chiefly on the First Amendment, whose uarantees include freedom of speech and press.

Harlan said the First Amendment protection, unlike a proper claim of the privilee against self-incrimination, "do not afford a witness the riht to refuse inquiry under all circumstances."

With Chief Justice Warren and Justice Douglas concurrin, Justice Black said that in his judgment Monday's holding "marks another major step in progressively increasin retreat from the safeguards of the First Amendment."

Justice Brennan was the fourth dissenter.

Barenblatt, 31, at the time he was hailed before the committee in 1954, was convicted of contempt of Conress in U.S. District Court here. He received a sentence of six months in jail and a $250 fine.

U.S. Court Upholds Denial of Passports

JUN 10 1959

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

Civil Liberties

WASHINGTON (AP)—The State department's authority to deny passports for Americans to travel to areas it regards as potential trouble spots, such as Red China, was upheld Tuesday by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

"In foreign affairs, especially in the intimate posture of today's world of jets, radio and atomic power, an individual's uninhibited yen to go and to inquire may be circumscribed," said an opinion by Chief Judge E. Barrett Prettyman.

"A blustering inquisitor avowing his own freedom to go and do as he pleases can throw the world international neighborhood into turmoil."

The unanimous decision of the three-man court rejected an attempt by William Worthy Jr. of Baltimore, Md., to get his passport renewed. It upheld a decision by the U.S. District Court made last Oct. 2.

The case is expected to be appealed to the Supreme Court.

As a reporter for the Columbia Broadcasting System, the New York Post and the Baltimore Afro-American, Worthy visited Red China for 41 days in 1956 and on his way home spent two days in Hungary in 1957. His passport was stamped "not valid" for travel to either country.

2 U.S. REDS SCORE SUBVERSION CURB

Civil Lib.

A Willing and a Reluctant Witness Join in Balking Some Senatorial Queries

MAY 16 1959

By C. P. TRUSSELL

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 15—Two Communist party officials appeared before a Senate investigating subcommittee today. One appeared willingly, the other unwillingly, but they gave similar testimony.

Arnold Johnson, a volunteer witness, told the Senate Internal Security subcommittee that he wwas the national legislative director of the party. James E. Jackson, who has signed documents as the party's director for Negro and Southern affairs, would not admit that he was a Communist. His business address in New York City was the same as given by Mr. Johnson.

At times, both provoked heated exchanges during the session.

Mr. Johnson came to oppose pending anti-subversion legislation. He said he had frequently disagreed with decisions of the Supreme Court, but had found one involving the Smith Act "superb."

Mr. Johnson has served a three-year prison term for violation of this statute, which makes it a crime to conspire to teach and advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence. The court ruling to which he referred held that the act applied only to advocacy of action to overthrow, not to abstract teaching.

Mr. Jackson was subpoenaed because of a recent trip he made to the Soviet Union and other Communist countries. The panel wanted to find out what instructions to the American party he might have brought back. The witness invoked the Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination steadily. At times he turned a ques-

Civil Lib # 59

China, was upheld Tuesday by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

"In foreign affairs, especially in the intimate posture of today's world of jets, radio and atomic power, an individual's uninhibited yen to go and to inquire may be circumscribed," said an opinion by Chief Judge E. Barrett Prettyman.

"A blustering inquisitor avowing his own freedom to go and do as he pleases can throw the world international neighborhood into turmoil."

The unanimous decision of the three-man court rejected an attempt by William Worthy Jr. of Baltimore, Md., to get his passport renewed. It upheld a decision by the U.S. District Court made last Oct. 2.

The case is expected to be appealed to the Supreme Court.

As a reporter for the Columbia Broadcasting System, the New York Post and the Baltimore Afro-American, Worthy visited Red China for 41 days in 1956 and on his way home spent two days in Hungary in 1957. His passport was stamped "not valid" for travel to either country.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Two Communist party officials appeared before a Senate investigating subcommittee today. One appeared willingly, the other unwillingly, but they gave similar testimony.

Arnold Johnson, a volunteer witness, told the Senate Internal Security subcommittee that he wwas the national legislative director of the party. James E. Jackson, who has signed documents as the party's director for Negro and Southern affairs, would not admit that he was a Communist. His business address in New York City was the same as given by Mr. Johnson.

At times, both provoked heated exchanges during the session.

Mr. Johnson came to oppose pending anti-subversion legislation. He said he had frequently disagreed with decisions of the Supreme Court, but had found one involving the Smith Act "superb."

Mr. Johnson has served a three-year prison term for violation of this statute, which makes it a crime to conspire to teach and advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence. The court ruling to which he referred held that the act applied only to advocacy of action to overthrow, not to abstract teaching.

Mr. Jackson was subpoenaed because of a recent trip he made to the Soviet Union and other Communist countries. The panel wanted to find out what instructions to the American party he might have brought back. The witness invoked the Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination steadily. At times he turned a question into sharp attack on what he called "this line of questioning."

Silent About Travels

He refused to discuss his travels, his speeches as reported by the Soviet press, the industries he visited, or other phases of his journey. He expressed resentment at being viewed, as he said, as "a courier, a messenger or something like that," for the American party.

He would not say that he had made reports to American Communists, despite reports made to that effect by the communist press in this country.

Mr. Johnson refused to say whether he would bear arms for the United States in the event of a war with the Soviet Union. Mr. Jackson said he would defend the United States in the event of "aggression" by any country. He said that Russia would never be "an aggressor."

Both of the witnesses contended that no Communist could be convicted again under the Smith Act. Communists, they held, do not believe in the overthrow of the United States Government by force and violence. They said that American Communists were loyal citizens, and that subversion was the instrument of "Dixiecrats and others" who would deny civil rights to citizens.

Both Democrat Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, chairman of the panel, who was not present. Mr. Jackson said the senator was from Poplarville, Miss., the scene of a recent lynching. Mr. Eastland's home is at Doddsville.

Mr. Johnson contended that Senator Eastland was calling for legislation against Communists "as a springboard to reverse Supreme Court decisions against segregation."

Mr. Jackson said that Senator Eastland "was contributing to the Dixiecrat hysteria."

Mr. Johnson said that the Senator was trying to "keep Negroes in bondage," the anti-subversive bills, are "for the birds" and subcommittee members are "just playing to the birds," he asserted.

59

Red Activity In City, State To Be Probed

Civil Liberties JUL 30 1959

Un-American Group Will Conduct Hearing Here

Rec. Sep. Mise

The Houston Post

By JIM MATHIS, Chief of The Post Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—The House Un-American Activities Committee will probe Communist propaganda infiltration into Houston in a September executive session there, The Houston Post has learned.

Committee Chairman Francis E. Walter, D-Pa, confirmed Wednesday that staff investigators have been in and out of the city and into other Texas cities for some time.

WALTER SAID the preliminary investigation was complete.

"On the basis of what we found, I will recommend that we go ahead with a hearing," Walter said.

"One of the things that we will be very much interested in is the flow of propaganda across the Mexican border through Houston," the congressman added.

Walter's recommendation is a formality. The committee had already approved the inquiry before investigators were sent into Texas.

THE INITIAL inquiry was handled by Bill Wheeler, a staff investigator. Investigator Ray Collins assisted in later phases.

No definite date has been set for the hearing. Committee staff members said that it would be no earlier than Aug 15, and would probably not come off until after Sept 15.

No one would reveal the number to be subpoenaed as witnesses for the closed hearings.

Indications were, however, that the initial committee inquiry would cover other areas of Texas as well as Houston. This could mean several witnesses will be heard.

ONE WITNESS is expected to be Irving Fishman, the U. S. Customs expert on Communist propaganda.

Fishman is assigned on a country-wide basis to the control of the importation of Communist propaganda into the United States. He works closely with the Post Office Department.

In a New Orleans hearing earlier this year before the Senate internal security subcommittee, Fishman testified at length on the movement of Communist literature from Mexico City, both from local Communist units and the Russian Embassy there, through the United States.

Fishman also testified that literally tons of Communist propaganda are received in New York and distributed through the nation.

FISHMAN SAID that the customs service needed more authority with which to combat the distribution of unmarked propaganda. He also suggested amending the Foreign Agents Registration Act.

See PROBE on Page 13

PROBE

Continued From Page 1

He pointed out numerous instances where the Communists had utilized the International Postal Convention to get their propaganda into the United States and other countries.

Mexico has 5,000 Communists in its open party in Mexico, and another 75,000 are in Lombardo Toledano's pro-Communist Partido Popular, the Senate subcommittee reported at that time.

In 1958, hearings were held in Atlanta. Fishman, who testified at that time also, said Communist propaganda was pouring into every colelge and university in the state.

Civil Liberties

Rec. Sep. Mise 1959

Shuttlesworth Hits Un-American Committee Tactics

MAY 27 1959

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD

Civil Lib.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The House Un - American Activities Committee and others who accuse integrationists of subversion were assailed by the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham at a rally for civil rights and civil liberties.

The responsive interracial audience of about 800 voted to protest to the U. S. Senate and House against Congressional proposals to revive state sedition laws or otherwise curb the U. S. Supreme Court.

Dr. M. M. D. Perdue, chairman of the meeting, appointed five prominent citizens to a committee to draft communications to representatives and senators. Those appointed were the Rt. Rev. C. Ewbank Tucker, bishop of the A. M. E. Zion Church; Frank L. Stanley, Sr., publisher of the Louisville Defender; the Rev. C. N. King, editor of the American Baptist; James A. Crumlin, president of the NAACP state conference, and the Rev. J. V. Bottoms, chairman of the board of Simmons University.

RALLY SPONSORS

All of these men were members of the Citizens Committee for Shuttlesworth, which sponsored the rally. The meeting was coordinated by the Southern Conference Educational Fund, of which Mr. Shuttlesworth is a board member. He is also president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights and secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Mr. Shuttlesworth, leader of the civil rights struggles in Birmingham, made a special plea for support of white persons who stand up for integration. He came to Louisville with the avowed purpose of protesting against the treatment of two white integrationists, Carl and Anne Braden.

The Bradens were jailed on sedition charges in 1954 after they acted as agents for a Negro family in the purchase of a house in a previously all - white neighborhood. After these charges were dismissed, Braden was given a year in prison for refusing to answer questions of the Un - American Activities Committee.

WASHINGTON POST JUN 14 1959

Courtroom Travelogue

Civil Liberties

The Secretary of State may have a constitutional right to tell Americans where they can travel abroad, as the Court of Appeals has ruled in the Worthy case, but we still believe that travel ought not to be restricted except in time of war or during some other overriding emergency. We are not persuaded that the foreign relations of the United States were endangered by the travels to Communist China and Hungary in 1956 of William Worthy Jr., a newspaper reporter. Nor do we think that travel by Americans anywhere in the world at this time would harm the foreign relations of the United States (although it admittedly might bring pressure for some sort of acknowledgment of the existence of Communist China). If such travel would seriously damage relations with other countries, American foreign policy is indeed fragile.

Regardless of what one thinks of the merits of the unanimous Court of Appeals decision, Chief Judge E. Barrett Prettyman makes an important distinction in his opinion between the Worthy case and the Kent case of last year in which the Supreme Court held that the Secretary of State cannot refuse a passport to anyone because of his beliefs or associations. In the Worthy case the Appeals Court upheld the Secretary's right to prevent Americans from traveling in certain parts of the world.

"No restrictions are proposed upon Worthy's thinking or writing," Judge Prettyman notes. "The restrictions proposed are on his physical presence in specified zones in foreign countries. They are restrictions upon acts, i.e., travel." Nevertheless, such regulations do have the indirect effect of restricting what a newspaperman may report. If a reporter is unable to go to Communist China, Hungary or any other country proscribed by the Secretary of State, the reporter's freedom is limited to a considerable degree. The Court's answer to this argument, which was raised by Mr. Worthy, is that no freedoms are absolute. This is of course true; still, it does not follow that one man, not even the Secretary of State, ought to have the power to restrict those freedoms, including specifically the right to travel or the freedom of the press to report the news.

Yet the decision in the Worthy case seems to give the Secretary of State wide latitude, in the absence of specific legislation, to restrict travel by Americans abroad, although Judge Prettyman points out that the restrictions must be "reasonable." The Court bluntly told Mr. Worthy, however, that he should take his argument "to the President or the Congress" because attempts by the courts to second guess the Secretary of State "would be a gross usurpation of Executive powers."

Mr. Worthy's argument may well be with Congress and the President, but we think that the issues that he has raised ought to be considered by the Supreme Court, too. His lawyers apparently will take the case to the Supreme Court. It seems to us that an individual's right to travel and the freedom of the press to report news wherever it happens are matters that need to be carefully balanced against the exigencies of foreign policy.

Liberties 1959

Civil Liberties Union To Seek Review Of Refusal Of Passport

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD JUN 1 8 1959

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA) — The American Civil Liberties Union said on June 10 it will seek a Supreme Court review of the decision of the United States Court of Appeals here that the refusal of a passport to a newspaper man was legally proper.

In an opinion by Chief Judge E. Barrett Prettyman, the State Department was upheld in its authority to deny passports for travel to areas it regards as potential trouble spots.

The unanimous decision of the three - judge court rejected the contention of William Worthy, Afro American correspondent, that he had a right to have his passport renewed.

The civil liberties organization has backed Worthy's test case since he was denied renewal of his passport for visiting Communist China and Hungary in 1957, despite the Government's ban on travel there.

BELIEF IN RIGHTS

Patrick Murphy Malin, ACLU director, stated in New York that "from the beginning of this case can citizen's right to travel is conwe have believed that an Ameristitutionally - protected and that the Secretary of State, barring actual wartime conditions, has no authority to deny the citizen his rights of free movement."

Continuing, Mr. Malin said: "In the Worthy case this constitutional principle has particular significance because there is also involved the right of the American people to receive information from newspapermen sent abroad.

"As the State Department has recently given passports to former New York Governor (Averell) Harriman and Vincent Sheehan for travel to Communist China, as 'legitimate reports,' the Department's refusal to allow Worthy, a foreign correspondent for the Baltimore Afro - American, to travel there also is rank discriminatory treatment."

CIRCUMSCRIPTION

In his opinion, Judge Prettyman noted that in the "posture of today's world of jets ..... and atomic power," the State Department may circumscribe a person's right to travel.

He added: "A blustering inquisitor avowing his own freedom to go and do as he pleases can throw the world international neighborhood into turmoil."

Atlanta Case Tests Probe Authority

Civil Lib. The Open Forum 1/59

The national ACLU last month posted $1,000 bond for Frank Wilkinson, former Los Angeles Housing Authority official, who was indicted by a federal grand jury in Atlanta, Ga., for refusing to answer questions concerning alleged Communist associations before the House Un-American Activities Committee last July.

The trial date in the test case challenging the constitutionality of the HUAC has been set for Jan. 19 in Atlanta. The U.S. Attorney in Georgia denied a Union request to postpone the case until the U.S. Supreme Court rules in the Barenblatt case, a parallel suit testing the validity of the House Committee's power to probe citizens' political beliefs and opinions.

Mandate Void

The Union emphasized that its interest in the Wilkinson case stemmed solely from its long-held belief that the mandate of the House Committee to investigate "un-American propaganda" is a violation of First Amendment guarantees under the Constitution.

"Since the House Committee was organized in 1938, the ACLU repeatedly has voiced its opposition to the Committee's mandate as an intrusion into the citizen's right — guaranteed by the First Amendment — to engage in political association and to express political opinion. The U. S. Supreme Court, in recent decisions, has curbed the power of the House Committee, but has not ruled precisely on the fundamental issue of the mandate's constitutionality.

Civil Liberties Question

"As is the ACLU's rule in all its cases, the Wilkinson test case is undertaken only because of the civil liberties importance of this constitutional question, and in no way is an endorsement of, or in sympathy with, whatever Wilkinson's political opinions may be. The case will be handled by the ACLU alone, without the assistance of any other national organization," the Union stated.

Civil Liberties - 1959

Ckps - Civil Liberties
July 1959

McCarthyism under the Magnolias

by WILMA DYKEMAN & JAMES STOKELY

"AT A TIME when the South might well use a renewed vision of Robert E. Lee's virtue or Andy Jackson's vigor," a young Southern liberal said recently, "it seems a shame that we should choose to start reviving the spirit of Joe McCarthy."

An embattled social scientist in Atlanta summed up the situation during a conversation: "One trouble outsiders have in understanding our present difficulties is the culture-lag in the South. McCarthy never caught on down here back in his heyday, but as the last-ditch fight for segregation grows more desperate, all his ugly techniques are revived. At the end of the decade we're in the throes of an experience the rest of the country put behind it in the early Fifties."

One recent example came, perhaps with some appropriateness, in the legislative halls of the nation's capital. When Representative Dale Alford, newly elected Congressman from Arkansas, presented his maiden speech in the House in February, the proposed subject of his discourse was only slightly less sensational than the whirlwind eight-day paste-in campaign which had won him victory over veteran Representative Brooks Hays in last November's election.

Voicing alarm "at the complacency of some officials toward the menace of the Communist conspiracy . . . to make this great nation of ours part of a one-world government, operated from Moscow," Representative Alford then announced he would reveal the close alliance between Communism and "racial agitation" in the South.

The speech was founded largely on intricate webs of association and denunciations of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the bi-racial Southern Regional Council, "renegade journalist" Harry Ashmore, "the Warren-Myrdal Supreme Court," and several less prominent individuals and groups. Its "revelations" were often without relevance.

Perhaps the whole performance of equating a controversial issue with Communism and then identifying as fellow travelers those people interested in confronting the issue seems anachronistic to Americans outside the South, where McCarthyism is only a bitter memory. But to many people in the South it is a significant thermometer reflecting the epidemic already in their midst, and a barometer suggesting the proportions of attacks yet to come.

As McCarthyism moves South under the magnolias, most of those against whom the search for subversives appears to be directed are not political Communists as much as racial non-conformists, people who seek a reasonable way of abiding by the Supreme Court ruling on desegregation of the public schools, while those who would subvert the law by defiance and maneuver designate themeselves the super-patriots and inquisitors. By their words the investigators are seeking out Southerners "soft on Communism;" by their acts they are singling out Southerners "soft on segregation."

Of course, the very fact that they feel this necessary indicates the absence of a monolithic South, and reveals that there are many Southerners who abhor the present dilemma and are willing to work for a solution. But the nature of this crisis, with its pull from the past and its emotional undertow, makes it especially susceptible to McCarthyism. In a time of tremendous change at the regional level (involving integration), and deep apprehension at the national level (involving Communism), where these regional racial tensions coincide with our national survival fears, there is created a no-man's land of uncertainty and suspicion. In such an atmosphere, threats and innuendo serve well to intimidate and immobilize creative thought and action on controversial problems.

In October, 1954, Circuit Court Judge Tom P. Brady of Mississippi made an address to the Indianola Citizens' Council. The judge gave a lengthy historical picture of the rise of the vertebrates, the various migrations, nations, and wars of mankind, and such "facts" of eugenics and biology as that "the Negro's brain pan seals and hardens quicker than the white man's." Seeking to explain how the Supreme Court had overlooked all this history and biology in its recent decisions, he cited the influence of the NAACP and the 87 "Communist-front organizations" behind it.

A year later the attempt to identify black leadership and the red cause received added impetus from Attorney General Eugene Cook of Georgia. In a talk entitled "The Ugly Truth about the NAACP," which was given saturation distribution as a printed pamphlet throughout the South, Cook sought to prove that through affiliations of some of its officers with other organizations, some of which were listed in the files of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, and because the Communist Party had an identical stated aim of "full racial equality," the NAACP had "allowed itself to become part and parcel of the Communist conspiracy to overthrow the democratic governments of this nation and its sovereign states."

He closed with a warning which was both the most explicit and implicit of any as to what "do-gooder" community leaders might expect if they continued to participate in interracial groups. "Investigations currently are being made . . . the results of which will greatly embarrass those good citizens who unwittingly have become involved in their activities. I urge all such persons to take immediate steps to disassociate themselves from these groups . . . before they, their friends, and their congregations are exposed to the anguish and embarrassment which exposure of these groups will necessarily mean."

WILMA DYKEMAN and JAMES STOKELY, native Southerners, are a husband-and-wife writing team whose recent book on the South, "Neither Black Nor White," won the 1958 Hillman Award and has now been issued in a paperback edition.

Such speeches, widely disseminated throughout the South by the segregationist Citizens' Councils, were only the prelude. In March, 1957, a special Louisiana state legislative committee (sometimes called the "watchdog" committee on segregation) held a three-day hearing in Baton Rouge to find "the causes of racial unrest in the South." As the testimony unfolded, however, it seemed that these causes had already been determined. The committee, headed by state Senator William Rainach, did not appear to seek from its six "cooperative" witnesses information as much as confirmation.

The Rainach Committee hearing marked the first appearance on the Southern scene of some of the old pros of the investigative road shows, refurbished now to play the Southern circuit. Manning Johnson, a Negro from New York and self-confessed former Communist, was the star. In 1954 Johnson was the principal denouncer in the loyalty investigation of United Nations Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche. His accusations were discredited. He himself testified before the Subversive Activities Control Board that he believed "some things are more important than the truth," and in 1956 the Board expunged from the record of certain of its hearings what it called "tainted" testimony given by Harvey Matusow, the late Paul Crouch, and Manning Johnson.

Yet Johnson, who was reported to have earned up to $9,096 over a two-year period as a professional former Communist witness, appeared in Louisiana to castigate Judge William Hastie, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt ("somebody should muzzle her and put her in a cage"), Martin Luther King, Jr. ("I think Reverend King could stand a thorough investigation"), the respected Southern Regional Council, and the Mississippi Council on Human Relations.

It was in testimony concerning these two organizations that Johnson's and the committee's irresponsibility became most evident. Having falsely asserted that the Southern Regional Council was founded by a Communist, Johnson compounded falsehood with guilt-by-association and reached from Louisiana over into Mississippi to discuss the Mississippi Council on Human Relations. He had no startling "revelations" about this state group but did take time to read into the record the names and addresses of the officers of the biracial organization.

The reason for publicizing these names and addresses was not made clear, but results came promptly. One board member named, along with the Catholic Bishop of Mississippi and other eminent clergymen, was the wife of a well-known Greenwood, Mississippi, cotton dealer. Six days after Johnson's testimony the dining room of their home was ripped by a bullet blast. A reporter later concluded, "It was not intended to kill but just to frighten."

These public proceedings did not nail down any specific Communist individual or group against which Louisiana and the federal government could move to lessen racial difficulties in the South. Assessments of guilt were conveniently general, emphasizing "racial nationalism," NAACP "dictation" to the Supreme Court and the President, and destruction of individual liberty by the "Communist timetable of world conquest."

Several subsequent investigations have arrived at similar conclusions. Hard on the heels of the disastrous developments in Little Rock, in October, 1957, the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, headed by Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi, moved into Memphis to study "Communism in the Mid-South." At the end of the two-day hearing, with 14 witnesses, seven had invoked the Fifth Amendment and one, a Little Rock housewife who had made news earlier that autumn by comforting one of the Negro girls in the school crisis, had been accused of affiliation with the Communist Party in 1945. The statement of conclusions, however, was still general: "Communist activity in the Mid-South is highly conspiratorial, deeply cloaked in secrecy." Without specific elaboration these deductions left room for intimidation, without risk of libel, when they asserted that the targets of the Red network were churches, parent-teacher associations, colleges, high schools, and labor organizations.

Three months later, in February, 1958, an investigation of racial agitation in Florida was undertaken by a joint legislative committee in Tallahassee. Senator C. E. Johnson, sponsor of segregation bills at two previous legislative sessions, was chairman. The star witness on this occasion was J. B. Matthews.

Billed as a one-time investigator for the late Senator McCarthy's Committee, it was not pointed out that Matthews had lasted as staff director for McCarthy less than a month. Although he asserted flatly that "Communists or Communist influence were directly involved in every major race incident of the past four years since the Supreme Court 'legislated' on the subject of integration," reports were forced to state that Matthews' further testimony was "general in nature."

The Tampa Tribune suggested that the committee's sessions had been "largely devoted to old charges and an intense study of the obvious." It stated that the committee's treatment of the treasurer of the Tallahassee Council on Human Relations "was repugnant to the American concept of fair play," and voiced the hope that in the future the committee might "have evidence which is current, and which is related to Communism."

The Human Relations Council treasurer to whom the paper referred was a respected furniture dealer, James Shaw. The episode involving him highlighted the most unsavory feature of such investigations and one frequently forgotten by many citizens. Equated in the public mind with a trial, these hearings are not bound by the rules of actual courts of law, and their arbitrary development of one point of view may make a mockery of justice.

Shaw was subpoenaed to present the financial records of the Tallahassee Human Relations Council to the committee. When he did so, he was refused the right to make a statement, although one member of the committee wished to hear him. Shaw later told the press: "I wanted to say that I presented the records under protest because I feel that being subpoenaed to bring them here created implications and insinuations about me and my organization. They could have called any officer of the organization and we would have been glad to turn over the records to them. Anyone could have attended any one of our meetings and realized there was nothing to investigate."

His summary of the council's aims and methods must seem modest enough to anyone removed from the total resistance atmosphere of much of the South today: "This organization is not secret. Most of our meetings have been held at the courthouse. One of the purposes of it is to create a line of communication between Negroes and whites. We have not done very much but we have tried to ease the tensions that have been created by statewide political campaigns."

The increasing all-out effort to discredit just these individuals and groups working to "create a line of communication" and "ease the tensions" became even more evident during a recent investigation conducted in Arkansas. Attorney General Bruce Bennett, who examined witnesses for the state committee, said the hearing would serve "as an educational program more than anything else," and added, "most of our case will be tried at the bar of public opinion." He indicated that those called to testify would be friendly to the committee's purpose, which indeed proved to be true.

Manning Johnson and J. B. Matthews were the principals among these witnesses. Johnson repeated his summary of Communist history and strategy and restated his antagonism to the NAACP which he had voiced at the Rainach Committee hearing in Louisiana. Matthews went even farther than he had during his appearance before the Florida committee. He named as Communists four former residents of Arkansas, two of whom had left the state years before, two of whom had been in Little Rock until recently. The rest of his testimony was largely an effort to link together those groups interested in integration and smear them and their members with one sweeping assertion of witting or unwitting aid to Communism.

This was the same Matthews who wrote back in 1953: "The largest single group supporting the Communist apparatus in the United States today is composed of Protestant clergymen." Virginia's Senator Harry F. Byrd promptly declared that Matthews "should give names and facts to sustain his charge or stand convicted as a cheap demagogue willing to blacken the character of his fellow Americans for his own notoriety and personal gain." Following a statement by President Eisenhower, Matthews resigned as staff director of the McCarthy Committee. It is not a history designed to inspire confidence in later accusations of Communist infiltration. Nevertheless, the committee proceeded with its televised probe featuring the testimony of these two men.

Since the hearings in Arkansas in December and Representative Alford's February speech to the House, Attorney General Bennett has branched out in his activities. In March he helped instigate and guide a legislative probe in the adjoining state of Tennesseee.

This exploration concerned the Highlander Folk School, founded and directed by Myles Horton, a native Tennessean. This school has been controversial since its establishment in 1934 by the very nature of its interests: labor organization and, more recently, racial integration. Endorsed by such national figures as Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Reinhold Niebuhr, Monsignor John O'Grady, Harry Golden, and former TVA Chairman Gordon Clapp, the school had come under close federal scrutiny when its tax-exempt status was restored over a year ago. But federal clearance did not satisfy Arkansas' Bennett, who flew to Nashville to testify that in his opinion the school is subversive. "Run 'em out! Run 'em out!" he advised the committee members, referring to leaders of the school.

Many Tennesseans resented his advice, recalling a thought-control bill he had introduced in his own state's legislature, making it unlawful "to encourage nonconformance with the established traditions, customs, and usage of the state."

The Chattanooga Times commented: "We are neither patrons nor partisans of Highlander Folk School . . . . But unpopularity is not a sufficient reason for official harassment or intimidation. When one man's right to argue an unpopular course is assailed, another's right to advocate the opposite is threatened." Fourteen University of the South professors, who live only five miles from Highlander, in nearby Sewanee, came out in a public statement supporting the school and its "democratic ideals." The Nashville Tennessean battled against what it called a "witch hunt," warning that Tennessee did not need or deserve "the distinction of reviving McCarthyism."

Interspersed with the activities of these various official committees have been numerous other investigations, legislative proposals, printed and verbal attacks designed to obscure the black and white problem with the red menace. The NAACP has been under constant fire but other groups gaining increased attention include labor organizations, teachers, the clergy, and interracial councils. (It may be significant for the future that Manning Johnson, one of the favorite "friendly witnesses" of these hearings, wrote an article denouncing the NAACP in a recent issue of the violently anti-Semitic Common Sense.)

"The NAACP? Oh, you mean the National Association for the Advancement of the Communist Party." At filling stations and small-town stores in many parts of the South there is ready evidence of the easy acceptance of a scapegoat.

Yet J. Edgar Hoover, in his recent Masters of Deceit, a source widely quoted throughout the South on other aspects of Communism, and even praised by Representative Alford in that very speech he made to show red influences in the NAACP, came to the conclusion that NAACP leaders have consistently thwarted the Communist Party's "vigorous efforts" at infiltration. In 1953 Hoover stated: "The American Negro is not hoodwinked by these false messiahs."

Early in 1957 a bill was introduced in the Tennessee legislature providing that a teacher may be fired "if while within the buildings, he shall make pronouncements or engage in or promote discussions for the purpose of influencing students or other persons with reference to the problem of the integration of the races." This particular measure to gag the teachers died, but the spirit behind it did not.

Last year, when 63 Louisiana State University professors signed a Louisiana Civil Liberties Union petition opposing segregation bills which would permit closing of public schools, a legislative inquiry of the professors was launched. Members of the House were reported to feel that "Communism and integration walk hand in hand," and anyone, particularly university faculty members, who opposes legislation aimed at keeping Louisiana schools racially pure "must have subversive tendencies."

In December, 1958, University of Arkansas President J. T. Caldwell felt it necessary to "repudiate unequivocally the imputation that the University of Arkansas has been penetrated by Communists and express the fullest confidence in the members of our faculty." And when the Arkansas Education Association, a statewide organization of white teachers and school administrators, stated as policy a few months ago, "We can never compromise our conviction that the public school system is not expendable," the 21-member Legislative Council was so outraged that it suggested the Education Association members were innocent victims of subversive influence—and ordered an investigation by the Committee on Subversion in Education.

The National Council of Churches has borne much of the brunt of the smear attack on churchmen. One South Carolina editor has said the NCC "will shower respect on anarchists, Communists, and atheists but deny respect to Southerners whose only crime is that they believe in traditional American states rights."

One of the most consistently attacked organizations in the South recently has been the dignified and reasonable Southern Regional Council. This is understandable because it works by, with, and for Southerners of both races in a discussion and research effort to undergird integration with solid fact and lasting effectiveness. Its voice is calm, its work is constructive, and its effect is cumulative. Unfortunately, much of its energy lately has been diverted in stamping out the leaf fires sparked by irresponsible incendiarists.

The SRC, under its knowledgeable young director, Harold Fleming, is filling a unique need in the region. Pitted against it is the testimony of —again—the ex-Communist, Manning Johnson, whose appearances before the Louisiana Rainach Committee provided the source for the subsequent attacks against SRC. A month after this hearing, in April, 1957, The Firing Line, published by the American Legion's National Americanism Commission, reported that Johnson's testimony "reflected the Council was formed by James E. Jackson, a Southern organizer of the Communist Party." The source of Johnson's information, in turn, was a boast in The Daily Worker on the many accomplishments of the said Jackson. But even the Worker's fantasy had not reached as far as Johnson's, for it claimed only that Jackson had "participated in the formation and building of the Southern Regional Council."

It is, of course, a matter of public record that the Southern Regional Council was founded in 1944; its distinguished incorporators were Bishop Arthur J. Moore of the Methodist Church, Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, and the late Dr. Howard W. Odum, professor of sociology at the University of North Carolina.

The SRC was the successor to the Commission on Interracial Cooperation which had been founded in 1919 by leading churchmen. Even so conservative and segregationist a newspaper as the Richmond Times-Dispatch felt moved in August of last year to clarify the issues in relation to the SRC: "As to the allegation of the Communist Daily Worker that James E. Jackson, chief of the Southern branch of the U.S. Communist Party, was a 'co-founder of the Southern Regional Council,' there is nothing to support this . . . he was not at any time an officer, director, or member of that agency. The Daily Worker's statement that he was a 'founder' is as unreliable and inaccurate as nearly everything else in that Communist sheet."

In May, 1957, The Firing Line made another allegation which was to be widely circulated in segregation circles and at last repeated by Representative Alford in his recent speech. "Records of the American Legion reveal a definite trend of interrelationship between the SRC and the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, a defunct Communist front organization."

The Southern Conference for Human Welfare is no longer in existence, but it once included in its "interrelationships" many prominent Southerners besides some who were later to be in the SRC. In 1938, at the Southern Conference meeting in Birmingham, Alabama, among those who were part of the proceedings were Governor-elect Burnett Maybank of South Carolina, Alabama's Senator John H. Bankhead, Bishop Robert Lucey of Texas, Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama, and others of equal prominence and reputation. In 1945 the Conference staged a dinner in Washington, D. C., honoring Justice Hugo Black. The toastmaster on this occasion was then Senator, later Vice-President Alben W. Barkley. At the speaker's table was the Honorable James F. Byrnes. Among the sponsors of the dinner were Secretary of State Edward Stettinius, Secretary of Defense James Forrestal, and President Harry S. Truman. Surely guilt by association cannot include all these men.

SRC Director Fleming said not long ago: "The tragedy is that these self-appointed experts on 'subversion' show no understanding whatever of the real Communist movements. It thrives on white supremacy and noisy defiance of desegregation rulings. The Communists wouldn't trade one Governor Faubus for 10,000 new recruits to the Party. By contrast, there are no more effective anti-Communists than those Southerners who are working for orderly compliance with the law of the land. Ironically, these are the very people whom the segregationist vigilantes falsely label 'reds' and 'subversives.' "

Eleven prominent Southern church officials said in a statement in early April: "The time has come for the public to be made aware of the resurgence of McCarthyism in the South. If there is in fact a Communist threat, then Dr. Alford and others like him have a responsibility to report their knowledge to the FBI; if not, they have a duty to check their facts. Otherwise, they themselves are doing the real service to Communism, which battens on confusion, false charges, and the blind defense of racial injustices in our country."

Where inequities exist in our country, it is, indeed, not the Communist Manifesto but the American Constitution that fosters unrest and makes citizens work for change. The McCarthy cry of "Communist" in a time of transition is appealing for two reasons: it is simple and it is emotional. It reduces a complex situation, with many ramifications and subtleties and need for sober logic, to one single outside cause, and stirs a rope-and-fagot reflex.

Most citizens, along with the U.S. Senate, finally came to their senses about the sickness of McCarthyism. Slowly, as Southerners themselves work to replace emotional resistance and bigotry with reason and respect for the law of the land, McCarthyism can be uprooted under the magnolias.

Reprinted from

The PROGRESSIVE

July 1959

For additional copies write to

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

63 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta, Georgia

Single copy, 5¢

Quantity prices on request

Outlawing Discrimination

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

When the mutual security authorization bill of 1959 was recently debated in the Senate, an amendment was proposed by Senator Wayne Morse to spell out "the sense of the Congress" that assistance under the law should be withheld from "any nation which as a matter of declared policy or practice * * * creates distinctions because of their race or religion among American citizens." This amendment was defeated by a very narrow margin—47 to 43. Civil Liberties

The matter is again before the Senate, the House having just adopted the mutual security appropriation bill and sent it to the upper chamber. It is hoped that the Senate will not hesitate to express itself bluntly on the subject of racial and religious discrimination against American citizens by countries which are the beneficiaries of our financial help. 8/4/59

A number of Senators, including Paul H. Douglas, Jacob K. Javits and Kenneth B. Keating, have expressed their intention to support an amendment to the appropriation bill, now before the Senate, to accomplish the same objective as Senator Morse's recently defeated proposal. In the past, this country's reaction to such affronts to American citizens has been clear-cut and positive; the same forthright position on the part of our Government is imperative today. N Y Times

The United States must take prompt steps to resist any and all stipulations and practices which draw distinctions between American citizens solely on the basis of race or religion. To do less is to surrender a precious right of our American heritage and to degrade the status of American citizenship.

HERBERT B. EHRMANN,
President, The American Jewish Committee. 8/4/59

New York, July 31, 1959.

Civil Liberties - 1959

BAR UNITS WIDEN RIFT ON LIBERTIES

2 Reports to National Group Clash on Passport Rights and U.S. Security Risks

AUG 15 1959

By AUSTIN C. WEHRWEIN

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 14—New evidence of a deep conflict within the American Bar Association on civil liberties and subversion came to light today with the release of conflicting committee reports on passports and Federal employment.

The reports made public today followed another report earlier this week by the bar association's Committee on the Bill of Rights. That committee protested the action taken by the association's House of Delegates at its February meeting in Chicago, the association's headquarters.

The earlier report by the Bill of Rights Committee and the two reports released today set the stage for a fight at the forthcoming meeting as bitter as the one last February. That conflict was provoked when the House of Delegates criticized the Supreme Court's decisions on security risks and Communist activities as "unsound."

The House of Delegates is the 248-member policy making body for the 200,000 lawyers who are members of the Bar Association. Its forthcoming meeting will be held during the association's general convention in Miami Beach from Aug. 24 to 28.

This was the conflict that developed today:

¶The committee on Communist Tactics, Strategy and Objectives urged that the American Bar Association call on Congress to restore to the State Department two powers. First, would be the power to deny passports to persons "knowingly engaged in subversive activities." Second, would be the right to use confidential information to refuse a passport if necessary.

¶The other committee, called the Committee on Individual Rights as Affected by National Security, said that freedom to travel abroad should be curtailed only when national security was "clearly" endangered.

Agrees With New York Bar

Expanding on this point, the Individual Rights Committee said that it had concurred with the findings of a special committee of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York on the same subject. The Individual Rights Committee went on:

"Travel should not be restrained and passports should not be denied solely on the basis of membership in any organization—even the Communist party—association with any individual group, adherence to unpopular views, or criticism of the United States or its domestic or foreign policies

Civil Liberties. 1959

Miami Beach from Aug. 24 to 28.

This was the conflict that developed today:

¶The committee on Communist Tactics, Strategy and Objectives urged that the American Bar Association call on Congress to restore to the State Department two powers. First, would be the power to deny passports to persons "knowingly engaged in subversive activities." Second, would be the right to use confidential information to refuse a passport if necessary.

¶The other committee, called the Committee on Individual Rights as Affected by National Security, said that freedom to travel abroad should be curtailed only when national security was "clearly" endangered.

Agrees With New York Bar

Expanding on this point, the Individual Rights Committee said that it had concurred with the findings of a special committee of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York on the same subject. The Individual Rights Committee went on:

"Travel should not be restrained and passports should not be denied solely on the basis of membership in any organization—even the Communist party—association with any individual group, adherence to unpopular views, or criticism of the United States or its domestic or foreign policies.

"Thus," the Individual Rights Committee continued, "action hostile to the national security of the United States must be reasonably anticipated, as opposed to mere speech or the holding of opinions; there must be an evidentiary showing that travel of a particular individual will constitute a definable danger to the national security of the United States."

The issue arises because of decisions of the United States Supreme Court that put severe limitations on previous State Department procedures that had led to the denial of passports. The Supreme Court held that Congress had not given the State Department the power it had been exercising.

Need Is Called Urgent

On the other hand, the Committee on Communist tactics said that it was an "urgent necessity" to get new legislation, "narrow in scope," until more comprehensive legislation could be passed. The first step, this committee said, is to give the State Department power to "withhold passports in the few exceptional cases" where the granting of one would be "contrary to the peace and security of our nation."

"This committee is of the firm opinion," the report went on, "that the right to travel outside the United States is nto an individual right of the nature and character of those guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, but partakes more of the nature of a privilege. The duty of the Government to protect itself in those few cases, from those who would destroy it, is vital, not only in times of war and emergency, but at all times."

In the field of Federal employment, the two committees were also wide apart.

The Individual Rights Committee objected to the extension to all Federal employes of a 1950 law that authorized the summary suspension of persons considered to be security risks.

The Communist Tactics Committee recommended that the law apply to all governmental employes whether in "sensitive" or in "nonsensitive" jobs.

Wants 'Loyal' Employes

The Communist Tactics Committee said the Bar Association should pass a resolution declaring that:

"The American public is entitled to the services of loyal Americans in the employ of their Government, regardless of whether employed in positions described as 'sensitive 'or 'nonsensitive'."

The Communist Tactics Committee is headed by Peter Campbell Brown, a former corporation counsel of New York City. He also headed the committee that wrote the controversial resolutions on the Supreme Court last February.

The Individual Rights group is headed by Frederick A. Ballard of Washington. He is also president of the District of Columbia Bar Association.

Civil Liberties. 1959

Seek Overturn Of Conviction Of Racial Liberal

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD
AUG 18 1959

Civil Liberties

NEW ORLEANS, La. — The U. S. Court of Appeals here has been asked to overturn the conviction of Carl Braden, Southern integration worker, on a charge of contempt of Congress.

Braden was sentenced to a year in prison last February for refusing to answer certain questions asked of him by a subcommittee of the House Un-American Committee in Atlanta, Ga., in July, 1958. He challenged the committee's right to ask the questions.

Five distinguished attorneys

(Continued on Page 3, Col. 7)

Seek Overturn

(Continued from Page One)

joined in filing a brief in the Appeals Court charging that the committee did not call Braden before it for a bona fide legislative purpose.

"Instead," they declare, "the Committee's purpose was to interfere with his rights of free speech, association and petition under the First Amendment to the Constitution.

"More particularly, the Committee's objective was to continue to harass and expose appellant for his support of integration and civil rights, and his opposition to the Committee and to pending bills which he believed harmful to the best interest of the nation."

Civil Liberties 1959

ROBESON ~~TO DE~~FY CURB

~~NEW YORK TIMES~~

Plans 1960 Visit to Red China Despite Passport Ban

AUG 2 3 1959

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Aug. 22 (Reuters) — Paul Robeson said in an interview published here today that he would ignore United States passport restrictions and visit Communist China and Hungary to give concerts.

Mr. Robeson, who passed through Budapest earlier this week on his way to Rumania, told the Hungarian Communist paper Nepszabadsag:

"For ten years I have been a prisoner in my own country. I was not allowed to go abroad and I was prevented from meeting the European soldiers of the world peace movement."

Although the singer's passport was marked "not valid" for both Hungary and China, Mr. Robeson said he would visit China by March and pay two visits to Hungary, one for a few days this fall. Next year he plans to return to Hungary for a concert tour lasting several weeks, he said.

Civil Liberties

Civil Liberties. - 1959

Removal Of Discrimination Seen Most Pressing In U. S.

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD DEC 15 1959

NEW YORK — (UPI) — The American Civil Liberties Union said Sunday the removal of racial discrimination in both the North and South is the most "pressing unfinished business" facing the nation.

Only meager progress has been made in combatting bias, said Exe-Director Patrick Murphy Malin in an introduction to the ACLU's 39th annual report.

He said the filibuster rule was changed only slightly in the last session of Congress and the only legislation was the extension of the Civil Rights Commission. The commission's recent "admirable" report, he said, was chiefly remarkable for showing how little had been accomplished by the Civil Rights Division of the Department cf Justice.

"Moreover, despite the emphasis on non - discrimination in the recent report of the Republican Committee on Program and Progress, the exigencies of presidential politics are likel yto prevent Republicans and northern Democrats from producing in the 1960 congressional session more than a lot of grandiloqnence,' 'said Malin.

CHANGING OPINION BEST NEWS

"From the federal government, therefore, we can realistically expect only a continuation of admirable court decisions .... and gradually intensified executive action."

Malin said that the "biggest and best news" was the continuing change of opinion among white southerners on the issue of public school desegregation.

"The businessmen of Little Rock - typifying the chief influence at work all through the South — have taken the lead in re-opening its schools," he said. "Massive resistance 'has crumbled in Bellwether Virginia; former Gov. Arnall of Georgia has announced that unless the schools of his state are kept open - segregated or not - he will seek election on that platform in 1962.

"Alabama and Mississippi will soon be alone in futile defiance of the irresitible tide."

Those states, said Malin, are now "conspicuous, though by no means alone ,in the outrage to which the ACLU is currently trying to awaken state and local bar associations: the refusal of white lawyers to represent Negroes in even due-process or free-speech cases."

EXPRESSES CAUTIOUS OPTIMISM

Malin expressed cautious optimism concerning the outlook for civil liberties generally.

"Civil liberties can never be permanently 'out of the woods' but they are a lot better off than they were in 1954, when the ACLU was approaching its 35th birthday," he said.

Malin said it was to be hoped that the recent television quiz scandals would prompt the industry to improve its service in behalf of civil liberties through "greatly amplified and varied presentation of serious public question," such as the forthcoming 1960 presidential campaign.

"This would help stave off government censorship of specific program content, while preserving government responsibility for general public - interest operation of what is in fact a public utility," said Malin.

Segr. + Priv.

ARKANSAS GAZETTE DEC 14 1959

ACLU Calls Bias in U. S. Top Target

New York, Dec. 13 (AP). — The 39th annual report of the American Civil Liberties Union today called the removal of discrimination in both the North and the South the organization's most pressing unfinished business.

Summarizing the report, Patrick M. Malin, executive director of the organization, said progress has been made in civil liberties in the last five years. But, he added, a lot remains to be done.

He said the attitude toward public school segregation in the South is changing "not rapidly but steadily." Alabama and Mississippi, said Malin, "will soon be alone in futile defiance of the irresistible tide."

At the same time, "much remains to be done before the North can justifiably claim it has shouldered its own share of a national and international obligation," Malin declared.

The report among other items protested religious teaching in public schools, and opposed the National Defense Education Act of 1958 for requiring a loyalty oath from students asking an education loan and for granting increased authority to the U. S. commissioner on education.

Civil Liberties 1959

Civil Liberties

'OATHISM' ON THE CAMPUS . . by Kevin Sullivan

WHEN ON November 17 Harvard and Yale universities withdrew from the federal student-loan program because of the loyalty-affidavit requirement, there was a ripple of applause through academic groves and a murmur of approval from editorial corners. But whether the conscience, or even the attention, of the great public was caught by this action is more than doubtful; for in a culture where intellect is suspect, the subject of education—except as an assayable commodity—is food for bores. Yet the significance of the event was clear. Two major universities, following a lead marked out for them by Princeton and several of the country's smaller liberal arts colleges (Amherst, Swarthmore, Oberlin and others), had by their action openly repudiated the implication, embodied in the National Defense Education Act of 1958, that the American student, precisely because he is a student in need of financial aid, is potentially a greater security risk than his less talented or less ambitious or less impecunious fellow-citizen. This citizen, like some of his Senators, might wonder what all the hullabaloo is about—why shouldn't these kids sign an affidavit worth $1,000 or more a year to them?—and he is likely to dismiss the issue as an egghead quibble, a tempest in an egg cup.

It was not always so. Apathy and hysteria polarize the public's response to education, and the present apathy—if the vote on the New York school-bond issue may be read as a symptom—is far from the hysteria that shivered the scholastic air when, two years ago, to our wild amaze a crew of vulgar boatmen launched Sputnik into space. The threat, then literally swinging over our heads, was valid cause for alarm; but it seemed then, and it still seems, that the alarm was excited more by the threat to our amour propre than to our armor of defense. Surpassed—could anyone doubt it?—in technological skill, in that know-how we used to think peculiarly our own, Americans developed overnight a sense of shame as acute as their sense of danger; we were as anxious in those days to relieve the national embarrassment as to bolster national defense. It was natural, therefore, that when we looked around in democratic indignation for someone to blame, the culprit should finally prove to be not the administration that shaped our policy nor the military charged with our defense, but the schools to which we had entrusted the education of our youth. Invidious comparisons were made between Soviet and American education, the air was thick with unanswerable question and jittery accusation, the prevailing mood was one of gloomy urgency. Educators, for the most part, perhaps secretly gratified that they were at last receiving any kind of attention, took the punishment quietly, for there was now a hope that once the furor died down the end of talk would be the beginning of action. And they were almost right, though the action they got was not altogether to their liking.

BY SEPTEMBER 2, 1958, less than a year after the Russians burst into space, Congress had passed and the President signed into law the National Defense Education Act. Though in signing the President spoke of the act as "an emergency undertaking to be terminated after four years," it was evident that this was no ordinary crash program. General debate over federal aid to education had been going on for almost a quarter of a century — a desultory and inconclusive debate. Now at last a decision had been made and a principle established: federal aid to education was right and necessary, though of course in the application of that principle—how much aid and what kind and to whom—room still remained for further discussion. This there has been.

Immediately after passage of the act—only twice before in our history had there been any comparable federal action on education: the Northwest Ordinance of 1787 and the Morrill Act of 1862 which established the land-grant colleges—the Administration, which had seen the bill pass smoothly through Congress (66 to 15 in the Senate, 212 to 85 in the House), was in a more optimistic, indeed a self-congratulatory mood. There was now a law which, according to the U. S. Office of Education, "authorizes something over one billion dollars in federal aid. In the swinging sweep of its ten titles it touches—and returns to touch again—every level of education, public and private, from the elementary school through the graduate." A month after its passage Lawrence G. Derthick, U. S. Commissioner of Education, expressed his gratification with "the broad sweep of approval" which the act had received across the country. Since then it has become increasingly clear that this was by no means a clean sweep.

Many educators, while acknowledging the act as generous, comprehensive and long past due, were troubled—chiefly, as the recent action by Harvard and Yale indicates, by the so-called loyalty-oath provision written into Title X, section 1001(f). This requires of all student applicants for a federal loan not only the usual oath of allegiance—few object seriously to this—but an affidavit to the effect that the student "does not believe in, and is not a member of and does not support any organization that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the United States Government by force or violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods." The italics are mine. The educators were not of course objecting to the rhetoric—though they might have itched to score this with blue pencil—but to the discriminatory implications of this particular disclaimer and to the practical and philosophical futility of all such oaths. The silence of the educators in the days of Sputnik now gave way to a collective—not, unfortunately, a concerted—chorus of dissent.

In the spring of this year, a Senate

KEVIN SULLIVAN is Assistant Dean of the Graduate Faculties, Columbia University.

Subcommittee on Education provided them with a forum. Individual officers of education who could not appear personally had firmly worded statements read into the record, and groups and associations of every stripe—college faculties, university departments, student associations, chapters of the AAUP, spokesmen for the ACLS, the Association of American Colleges, even non-academic organizations such as the American Jewish Congress and the National Council of the Churches of Christ—joined common cause in opposition to the provisions of Title X. And the cause seemed notably advanced when Arthur Flemming appeared before the subcommittee and threw the weight of his Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to the side of the dissidents.

THE NEXT three months were full of hope. Late in July, the Senate, despite competing claims of other national and international business, scheduled two days of debate on a bill (S.819), sponsored by Senators Kennedy of Massachusetts and Clark of Pennsylvania, which would eliminate both the disclaimer affidavit and the positive oath of loyalty. Since this bill had been reported out of committee by a 12-3 vote and had the demonstrated support—overwhelming but not unanimous—of the country's educators and other interested groups, it actually seemed for a short time that common sense was going to prevail. It did not. The debate on the floor of the Senate ended in a draw, with the Kennedy-Clark bill returned to committee, but in the two days of debate, despite the pettifoggery of some Claghorns, specific issues were defined and broader issues implied which have bearing not only on American education but on the American ethos.

There were four substantive points of debate: (1) the relation of "education" to "defense" in the title of the National Defense Education Act; (2) the distinction between "oath" and "affidavit" in Title X of the act; (3) the substitute amendment offered by Senator Mundt—in effect a "little Smith Act"; and (4) the discriminatory implications of section 1001(f), Title X.

Debate on the first issue quickly revealed that the original act passed through Congress as handily as it did not because it was an education bill, but because it was a defense measure. Without another twenty-five-year argument, this may have been the only way such a bill could have gained the assent of Congress, but it now raised as many problems as it had seemed to solve. Waterloo may have been won on the playing fields of Eton (though as good a case might be made for the ploughlands of Kerry or the plains of Prussia), but this was not because cricket pitches had been dug into obstacle courses. Education imparts skills which conceivably are immediately applicable to our first line of "defense," but at its best it also insinuates values which in a democracy must always remain the ultimate bulwark of defense. The National Defense Education Act, designed to encourage the production of scientists, engineers and experts in certain "language areas," emphasized skills to the neglect, many think, of values. A nuclear physicist fluent in Kalmuck-Mongolian may be a good man to have around in any future unpleasantness, but there is perhaps as great a need for men who remember Thermopylae and Runnymede and the plains of Troy.

THE supporters of the Kennedy-Clark bill recognized this weakness in the original act—the failure, in Senator Javits' unhappy trope, to allow education "to stand on its bottom as education." They realized, too, that the opponents of the bill had apparently a strong debating point in this coupling of "defense" with "education." For this reason, Javits later in the debate moved to amend the bill, continuing the elimination of the disclaimer affidavit, but preserving the positive oath of loyalty and attaching the standard penalties for perjury. This amendment squeaked through the Senate by a 46-45 vote.

It may or may not come as a surprise that there were Senators who saw, or professed to see, no distinction between a positive oath of loyalty and a negative statement of belief—the disclaimer affidavit. On this point there was pettifogging aplenty. But Senator Kennedy, who showed in sponsoring the bill a kind of courage he once wrote about, showed also patience and skill in countering what must have seemed deliberate dimwittedness. He agreed on the floor to retention of the oath, and when (in the form of the Javits amendment) the point was formally yielded, the Senate gave de facto recognition to the distinction between oath and affidavit. The attack then turned on what his opponents supposed was the indecision revealed by the concession.

Senator Mundt, accordingly, moved to amend the Kennedy-Clark bill by substituting for the disclaimer affidavit the standards and penalties of the Smith Act—in slightly different language of untested meaning:

> (f) (1) No person shall hereafter accept any funds, payment, loan, or other benefit made available under the authority of this Act if such person (A) advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by illegal means, or (B) is a member of an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by illegal means, knowing that such organization so advocates.

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be guilty of a felony, and shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year and a day, or both.

The Mundt maneuver was unsuccessful. When his supporters, admitting Senator Kennedy's claim that this was indeed no more than "a little Smith Act," argued that there was surely no harm in placing the same provisions on the statute books a second time, the Senator—quoting Lord Faulkner—answered with the most effective epigram of the debate: "When it is unnecessary to act, it is necessary not to act." There was also a question of the constitutionality of the Mundt amendment. "If a student," Senator Clark argued, "receiving benefits under the act has to disqualify himself because of ineligibility under the terms of the amendment, he is virtually admitting liability under the Smith Act and is forced to incriminate himself in violation of the Fifth Amendment." There was the possibility, too, that the broad prohibition against advocacy of overthrow of the government might violate the First Amendment. (The first amendment also seemed jeopardized by the original affidavit disclaimer, though this point was not made by any supporter of the Kennedy-Clark bill: while it is permissible and, on occasion, necessary for the government to exert control over the placing of any belief into action, the First Amendment clearly implies that no control may be exercised over the mere holding of an intellectual belief.)

The most effective arguments advanced by the anti-affidavit forces were on grounds of the discrimination against—the insult to—American students, especially needy students, implicit in the disputed provision of the act. Even the opponents of the bill admitted that neither oath nor affidavit was of any use in actually screening out a subversive student who, committed to a sinister ideology, would cheerfully sign anything—the more cheerfully, perhaps, since a little touch of perjury might provide him with a fine immunity from investigation. The Senators might have extended this line of reasoning a little further and concluded, with President Kirk of Columbia, that such an oath is not only useless but worse than useless since "A false sense of security is perhaps the most perilous of all putative assets a country can have."

The kind of discrimination found objectionable was made ludicrously plain by Senator Clark who, in a parliamentary maneuver that would have delighted W. S. Gilbert, moved still another substitute amendment to the effect that not only students, but farmers receiving price supports and businessmen accepting subsidies (at this point Senator McCarthy of Minnesota, getting into the swing of things, suggested that Clark also include school children who get free lunches)—that the whole kit and caboodle be compelled to swear a loyalty oath with one hand if, with the other, they were dipping into the public trough. This tactic cleared the air, but did not impress the Mundtmen across the aisle.

IN THE most lucid and compelling speech of the debate, Senator McCarthy then dissected the loyalty-affidavit requirement in terms of principle and propriety. The Senate was reminded—though the reminder seemed hardly necessary—that a fundamental concept of democratic government is the assumption that a citizen, insofar as crime is concerned, is innocent until proven guilty; that, insofar as his general behavior as a citizen is concerned, the assumption must also be that he is loyal until it has been proved that he is other than loyal. The assumption of the affidavit provision of the National Defense Education Act is just the reverse of this.

A second principle, less widely held perhaps, is that professional groups have the responsibility and the right to govern their own members—the authority of government intervention being reserved in a democracy to occasions when the common good is threatened by the failure of self-discipline in a particular profession. The integrity of the academic community — though apparently questioned — cannot be insured, nor can it be undermined, by the taking of oaths and affidavits. We in the teaching profession all have a lot of disagreeable things to put up with, but somehow students generally are able to hold their own against the faculty, the faculty survives despite the administration, the administration manages despite regents and trustees, and—in the case of state universities—the board of regents seems to survive despite the state legislatures. It cannot be said that as a community we have failed in self-discipline. Until substantial evidence to the contrary is produced, the government has no need nor, it would seem, any right to intervene with measures which purport to guarantee the loyalty of our students.

There is finally the question of propriety. In the Judaeo-Christian tradition of Western civilization, an oath has always had a special character, and the taking of an oath long considered an act of great religious as well as civil significance. Today there is reason to doubt that this is any longer so; the civil significance of an oath seems to have rubbed off with its sacred patina. So at least one might conclude from the massive perjury by some hundred respectable citizens called to testify before a grand jury in connection with the recent television nonsense. It is not enough to explain this away by the routine manner in which oaths are commonly administered. The individual citizen cannot abdicate his responsibility—to himself, or to his government, much less to his God, if he has one. Despite routine, an oath remains a matter of personal dignity and solemn affirmation. Its occasions are special. It will lose something of its luster and significance, as well as its effectiveness, if taken lightly or without due cause and ceremony. But making a loan to a college student is an ordinary contractual piece of business, trivial in itself, perfunctorily undertaken. It diminishes the dignity of the oath, in itself and possibly in the eyes of the student, to compel it on occasions of inconsequence. A man who takes his wife too much for granted may be laying the ground for adultery; a student accustomed to taking an oath for granted—he must go through the routine at the beginning of each school year—may be unconsciously involved in remote preparation for perjury.

ON JULY 23, the Senate voted 49 to 42 to send the Kennedy-Clark bill back to committee for further study. Its sponsors intend to reintroduce it at the next session of Congress and they have well-grounded hopes of meeting with success on this second try. Their hopes are grounded in the arguments advanced during the debate of last July and are further supported, I think, by a detectable change in the intellectual atmosphere of the Senate itself.

It is inconceivable that when the National Science Foundation Act was discussed in the Senate a decade ago, such a debate as occurred in the past summer could have taken place. That was the dawn of the McCarthy era and Senators and citizens were already looking about for a shady place against the hour when the full heat of McCarthy's day should be upon them. The National Science Foundation does require a disclaimer affidavit, and no Senator at the time objected to it. This may have been because the provisions of the National Science Foundation embraced areas of nuclear research which, conceivably, touched closely on our national security. But this difference should also be noted: the affidavit was required of a recipient of an N.S.F. grant; the affidavit is now required of an applicant for a federal loan. The larger difference, however, is the less easily definable one—the change of air. There is perceptible impatience in the Senate these days with sloganized patriotism, anti-intellectual innuendo, the exploitation for home consumption of communism as a bugbear, and that game-legged rhetoric whose principal device seems to be the ruptured enthymeme.

Meanwhile, as the Senators settle down to their homework, educators might look again to their lessons. Originally only a handful of colleges and universities refused on principle to participate in the program. (At least one, it is reported, refused not on grounds of principle but because of the fuss, bother and expense of administering the law.) Most institutions have chosen to remain in the program while continuing to press for an amendment to the act such as that proposed in the Kennedy-Clark bill. This is an acceptable if expedient course. The dramatic action of Harvard and Yale in withdrawing from the program is perhaps more exemplary and, because of the prestige of these institutions, may be considered particularly effective.

But how much more effective it would be if, instead of Dr. Pusey phoning Dr. Griswold, a vast network of telephone conversations among presidents of American colleges and universities resulted in concerted action by leaders and spokesmen of American higher education. This is of course Utopian, a comfortable thought, in which we cannot as yet take comfort.

Moral Standards in Foreign Policy . . by Robert Paul Wolff

IN RECENT years the vocabulary of Ethics has been pre-empted in discussions of international relations by zealots who see the world situation as a death struggle between Western Christianity and Atheistic Communism. They endow every twist and turn of our foreign policy with the sanctity of divine law, confident that God is in their corner.

Many Americans have been repelled by the smug arrogance of this attitude. In a world of ideology, they are suspicious of all self-serving moralism, preferring to drop "right" and "good" from the language of foreign affairs. Typical is this statement by George Kennan, in his book Realities of American Foreign Policy:

> Morality, then, as the channel to individual self-fulfillment — yes. Morality as the foundation of civic virtue, and accordingly as a condition precedent to successful democracy—yes. Morality in governmental method, as a matter of conscience and preference on the part of our people — yes. But morality as a general criterion for the determination of the behavior of states and above all as a criterion for measuring and comparing the behavior of different states — no.

THIS view, in my opinion, is thoroughly mistaken, though I sympathize with the motives behind it. Amoralism in international affairs is as wrong as the moralizing against which Kennan protests. But it is not enough simply to say that Kennan is wrong. There are compelling arguments against the introduction of Ethics into foreign relations, and to rebut them it is necessary to go into the subject at some length. In this article I can only hope to touch on the main aspects of the problem.

First of all, we must clear up a recurrent confusion over two commonly used terms, "idealism" and "realism." Every time we ask what to do in a given situation we are really asking two questions. First of all, we look at the facts and ask, What can we do? If there is literally only one possibility, then we needn't go any further, for of necessity that is what we will do. (Remember that unpleasant alternatives are still alternatives. Even self-sacrifice is a possibility, as so many martyrs have taught us.) But if there are two or more courses open to us, then we must ask a second question, What should we do?

What things can we do? Which of them should we do? This is the structure of every human decision. Now some people ignore the first question. They make all sorts of

---

ROBERT PAUL WOLFF teaches philosophy at Harvard University.

DEC 14 1959

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

Prejudices No. 1 Block, Group Says

Liberties Union Sees Long Fight

NEW YORK (AP)—The 39th annual report of the American Civil Liberties Union Sunday called the removal of discrimination in both the North and the South the organization's most pressing unfinished business.

Summarizing the report, Patrick M. Malin, executive director of the organization, said progress has been made in civil liberties in the last five years. But, he added, a lot remains to be done.

He said the attitude toward public school segregation in the South is changing "not rapidly but steadily." Alabama and Mississippi, said Malin, "will soon be alone in futile defiance of the irresistible tide."

At the same time, "much remains to be done before the North can justifiably claim it has shouldered its own share of a national and international obligation," Malin declared.

The report also, among other items:

Noted that organized labor is being criticized even by its friends for failure to end discrimination within unions.

Urged the television industry to amplify and give a greater variety of coverage of serious public issues.

Opposed the National Defense Education Act of 1958 for requiring a loyalty oath from students asking an education loan and for granting increased authority to the U.S. Commissioner of Education.

Williams' Attack

ARKANSAS GAZETTE

Character Assassination —And at Public Expense

Civil Liberties 5/29/59

From the Christian Century

Representative John Bell Williams of Mississippi, extreme segregationist, a year ago placed in the Congressional Record a biased denunciation of the Methodist Church. Reprints of that piece have since been widely distributed by racist groups in the South. Now the public is again called upon the bear the expense and the indignity of Representative Williams' abuse of his privileges as a congressman. He has placed in the Congressional Record a scurrilous attack on the National Council of Churches and on many of the 600 Protestant clergymen and laymen who attended the Fifth World Order Study Conference held in Cleveland last November. He did this by incorporating into a short speech he gave on the floor of the House a mimeographed pamphlet, Recognize Red China? which was issued over the name of M. G. Lowman, head of the Circuit Riders, Inc., an organization with headquarters in Cincinnati. The pamphlet purports to show that 103 of the clergymen who attended the Cleveland conference have a "subversive record." It does this by the familiar device of trying to identify persons with organizations which "promote the Communist line." It is wildly inaccurate in its identifications of individuals and in its description of organizations. For example, it lists approximately 200 organizations as subversive, whereas only 30 of those it names are on the United States attorney general's list of subversive groups. Only 33 of the 103 persons named as promoters of the Communist line are identified as having anything to do with any of the organizations on the attorney general's list. Even these identifications are suspect; for instance, a man might have spoken out in behalf of the Spanish loyalists in the 1930s, or joined a Soviet-American friendship organization in the 1940s, or visited Yugoslavia in the 1950s. Any of these acts or others similarly innocent and blameless is made to serve as sufficient excuse for listing an individual and for identification of him with acts or groups which are held to be subversive but which more often than not are misrepresented. Now all this hate-mongering, suspicion-breeding and essentially untrue brew can be made available for wholesale distribution at public expense through use of a congressman's franking privilege. It is high time that Congress investigated and corrected the synical and extravagant abuse by a minority of its own members of the pages of the Congressional Record and of the free use of the mails.

Matrimonial Prospect

civil liberties 1959

A. Lyd. Weekly
Summer 1959

Civil Liberties and the Court

Not long ago, Professor Samuel A. Stouffer announced the results of a poll showing that some 60 percent of the people questioned opposed permitting an individual to speak against religion in their communities.

An even higher percentage replied negatively to the question: "Suppose an admitted Communist wanted to make a speech in your town, should he be allowed, or not?"

Two similar polls, taken by professors at the University of Wisconsin and at Northwestern, produced the same results. Less than two percent of those interviewed agreed with all of the provisions of the Bill of Rights.

The reactions of those polled indicate that while the Bill of Rights may be accepted from a theoretical standpoint, applied at the practical level, the civil liberties it seeks to insure are often condemned and criticized.

This was certainly true when a copy of the first ten Constitutional amendments was removed from a state house bulletin board because an official thought it "too controversial" for the state's employees. Although the amendments had been posted only as a reminder of Bill of Rights Day, they were not returned to the bulletin board until approved by the governor.

The trouble with civil liberties and civil rights is that they are too often abstractions. Cold war tensions abroad and desegregation decisions at home all too often overshadow philosophical beliefs and principles. Even when traditional liberties and rights are not forgotten altogether, they can be subordinated in the interest of seemingly more pressing problems.

Today, the question of relative importance as between individual liberties and internal security is being debated with only slightly less fervor than during the heyday of McCarthyism. What was once an attack on the legislative and executive branches of our federal government has now been transferred to the judicial arm.

Those who criticize the Supreme Court claim that since 1956, it has been "too soft on communism." They are joined by others whose distaste for the Court stems from its 1954 school integration decision. The attackers include extremists as well as responsible and honestly concerned men. Many are convinced that the Court has gone too far in protecting the individual at the potential expense of society. While the cries of the extremists are to be expected, the reasoning of prominent lawyers and legislators must be answered.

Early in February, the American Bar Association's House of Delegates adopted a series of resolutions calling on Congress to write new anti-subversive laws as the answer to recent Court decisions.

Long considered a bastion of conservatism, the ABA's action was unexpected only in that its resolutions were sharply critical of the Court's actions. In effect, the resolutions told the Court it was wrong in its judgment and urged Congress to amend internal security legislation to plug the loopholes used by the Court.

Harsh as the resolutions were, they proved to be weaker than a report supporting the resolutions that was presented to the ABA by a special Committee on Communist Tactics, Strategy, and Objectives.

The report—which was never actually endorsed by the delegates—contained little detailed criticism of individual cases and less in the way of specific suggestions on how the cases should have been decided. Instead, it contented itself with a general charge that the Court was too lax on subversion.

It asserted that "many cases have been decided in such a manner as to encourage an increase in communist activity. . . . The paralysis of our internal security grows largely from construction and interpretation centering around technicalities emanating from our judicial process which the Communists seek to destroy, yet use as a refuge to masquerade their diabolical objectives."

While the resolutions adopted by the House of Delegates sustained the criticism found in the report of the committee, they tried to make sure that this criticism would not become ready ammunition for those who would place restrictive limits on judicial review.

ABA Action

A preamble to the resolutions stated that the ABA disapproved "proposals to limit any jurisdiction vested in the U. S. Supreme Court by the Constitution." As if to show that the House of Delegates was not a reactionary body, before adjourning it elected as its new president, Whitney North Seymour, a lawyer who once successfully defended a Negro Communist before the nation's highest tribunal.

Despite the ABA's separation of the committee report from the resolutions it adopted, the interested public—based on press reports—failed to see any real difference. In Congress, the association's action was hailed as a "scathing criticism" of the Court and the committee report was twice reprinted in the Congressional Record.

Local Groups

To combat this impression, a number of local and state bar groups have since publicly declared that they oppose curtailing Court jurisdiction.

Typical of such action was a statement made by the New York County Lawyers' Association that "if anybody construes the [ABA] resolution as an effort to curtail the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, we don't agree with the resolution.

A similar stand has been taken by Attorney General William P. Rogers, who defended the ABA's attitude toward the Court, claiming that "there is a lot of misunderstanding on this." Rogers told reporters that the ABA's president had assured him that the organization's call for new anti-subversive legislation did not attack the Court.

Rogers' view was apparently not shared by either Chief Justice Earl Warren or Warren Olney III, director of the administrative office of the U. S. Courts and former chief of the criminal division of the Justice Department. Chief Justice Warren resigned from the ABA late in 1957, presumably over the group's criticism of the Court, while Olney resigned this March after terming the ABA's Court resolutions "discreditable."

Six Decisions Opposed

The attack on the Court stems from six specific decisions. These are the opinions criticized by the ABA and by a number of Congressmen and Senators who have introduced legislation to correct the Court's actions and limit its jurisdiction. The decisions include:

- A ruling that only the federal government—not the states—may act against Communist subversion;
- A ruling that mere advocacy of violent overthrow of the government—as an abstract idea —is not sufficient ground for conviction of a violation of the Smith Act;

• A ruling that confessions of a defendant cannot be admitted as trial evidence if the confession was made during a period of "unnecessary delay" between the arrest and arraignment of the defendant;

• A ruling that witnesses before Congressional committees cannot be convicted of contempt for refusing to answer questions if the committee has not spelled out its authority and its mandate from Congress;

• A ruling that government employees in non-sensitive jobs need not answer all loyalty questions asked by Congressional committees or by authorized officers of the executive or judicial branches of government;

• A ruling that an alien cannot be deported for Communist membership if he was not a member of the party after his last entry into the country.

In criticizing each of these decisions, the ABA—speaking for those who urge more effective control over communism — has urged remedial legislation.

Without questioning the integrity of the association's committee, it is interesting to note that a number of the committee's members were far from being disinterested spectators in these decisions. The chairman is a former member of the Subversive Activities Control Board and was also a counsel of record in one of the cases cited.

Another committee member was a counsel of record in two of the cases criticized and argued as an amicus curiae (friend of the court) in a third case. Given these circumstances, it is hard to be objective.

The decision that aroused the greatest opposition involved the Court's ruling that only the federal government can act against subversion. Steve Nelson, a Pennsylvania Communist leader, was convicted of violating the state's sedition act. Under the language of the state law, he was charged with "bringing the government of this state or the United States into hatred or contempt" and sentenced to 20 years in prison and $23,000 in fines.

Although the state sedition act was so restrictive of free speech that its constitutionality was doubtful, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court did not consider the constitutional question. Instead, it reversed the conviction on the ground that the Smith Act had pre-empted the field of subversion for the federal government and made similar state statutes unenforceable. The U. S. Supreme Court upheld the state court's opinion.

Opponents of the Nelson decision have proposed two specific pieces of legislation. One bill—introduced by Senator Styles Bridges (R., N. H.)—would permit the states to enforce their own laws against advocacy of the federal government's overthrow. The other bill—introduced by Representative Howard Smith (D., Va.)—would use the Nelson ruling as an excuse to prevent the Supreme Court from holding that Congress has pre-empted any field of legislation.

Smith's bill, H. R. 3, would not only narrow the jurisdiction of future courts, but it is written to be retroactive. Because of its natural appeal to the advocates of states' rights as well as the probability that it would drastically affect labor and welfare legislation, H. R. 3 passed the House last year by a 241 to 155 vote. It was defeated by only one vote, 41 to 40, in the Senate.

This year, H. R. 3 has again been introduced and has already been approved by the House Judiciary Committee. Despite Administration disapproval, 11 Republicans joined with eight Southern and border state Democrats in sending the measure to the Rules Committee.

Since the bill's chief sponsor is chairman of this committee, the measure is expected to receive prompt attention and provide the House with its first major test on anti-Supreme Court sentiment.

The Bridges proposal, with its less sweeping features, is considerably less controversial, but still raises important questions. Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh—who opposes H. R. 3—has testified that he favors the Bridges bill because it permits more people to enter the anti-sedition fight. He admitted, however, that he does not know of any gap opened in our national security by the Nelson case and that he could think of no one deserving prosecution who had escaped as a result of the decision.

Constitutional Problems

Although Walsh could see no philosophical objection to the Bridges bill, civil liberties groups were quick to point out constitutional problems. These organizations charge that state prosecution brings with it an interference with an essentially federal responsibility and a real danger of the persecution of those who hold unpopular but harmless views.

The American Civil Liberties Union has asserted that "there has been no illuminating evidence that sedition can ever be a purely local concern which does not affect the nation as a whole and does not require united federal protective action.

Pointing to the past as well as the present, the ACLU has warned that the wave of post-World War I persecutions of unpopular opinions as well as the present Southern state statutes aimed at preventing desegregation are indications of what can and will happen when state sedition laws are given free rein.

As an example, the ACLU asserted that in the Carl Braden case, a Kentucky citizen was prosecuted for sedition under state law after he sold a house in a "white area" to a Negro and defended the Negro's right to occupy the dwelling. "In view of the record of Southern legislatures in the last four years," the ACLU has said, "such laws . . . will be used as a serious deterrent to the implementation of the Fourteenth Amendment insofar as it applies to desegregation in the public schools and other facilities."

Even more dangerous in the ACLU's eyes is the proposal of the bar association to make illegal the "theoretical advocacy of government overthrow as well as the present prohibition against incitement to action."

Legislative measures to end the distinction between an expression of free speech and actual incitement spring from the Court's 1957 Yates decision. In this case, the Court held that the Smith Act could not be interpreted to ban theoretical opinion.

The ACLU has charged that the passage of any law crossing over the "danger zone into unconstitutionality" would seriously hamper free speech and association and would be "unwise" and "ineffective."

Other groups have taken a similar position in regard to the so-called "Mallory bill"—a measure designed to overcome the Court's objection to confessions obtained after "unnecessary delay." Such a bill, they declare, might make it easier for law enforcement agencies to apprehend criminals, but this help for the prosecution must be balanced against the denial of civil liberties to the accused.

Best Protection

The ACLU has asserted that its major objections to the suggested laws center on the deprivation of individual rights in the name of national security. Attacking the bar association's resolutions, the ACLU declared that "our real security might be weakened by being unnecessarily restrictive of our civil liberties. The best positive protection for our security is scrupulous observance of our Constitutional guarantees. . . ."

If this argument is to be denied, those who seek strong legislation at the expense of civil liberties must be able to show that the security of the nation demands such sacrifices.

The record proves, however, that such a position will not stand up. Early this year, Representative James Roosevelt (D., Calif.) analyzed the House Un-American Activities Committee's own report of achievements from 1941 through 1958.

Representative Roosevelt pointed out that of the 79 recommendations made by the committee, 34 were duplications of proposals made in various sessions of Congress. He said that of this net of 45 proposals, relevant legislation was adopted in 35 instances.

After checking these 35 pieces of legislation, the California legislator concluded that "the only legislation . . . which it can be said that the House Un-American Activities Committee was directly responsible for, is the Internal Security Act of 1950 and 1954 amendments thereto."

While it is true that Representative Roosevelt's measuring rod is not the sole test of a committee's values, the passage of only one major bill during a 20-year period does indicate an extremely ineffective operation.

Balanced against this one bill is the hardly debatable fact that the committee's activities have seriously invaded the area of civil liberties and impaired the nation's prestige among the people of the free world.

The numerous witch-hunting expeditions of the House Committee, the sponsorship by its chairman—Representative Francis Walter (D., Pa.)—of an immigration law with racial preferences, and the similar tactics of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, have done little to convince the world that the United States is proud of its tradition of individual rights and liberties.

View from Abroad

Proposals to limit free speech in a nation that points with pride to its Bill of Rights appear paradoxical in the uncommitted countries that judge democracy and communism by what they see and read.

To these countries, a legislative move to permit the government to deport an individual who at one time, perhaps many years ago, entered the United States as a Communist, but who later returned to this nation as an anti-Communist, seems to defy logic. Such a bill, aimed at overcoming the Court's Bonetti decision, appears to discourage Communist defectors, not help them.

To the people of the free world, restrictions on civil liberties in a time of national emergency is nothing new. But while these people may be convinced democrats in the cold war, they understandably see few examples of the United States being threatened internally.

To date, Congress has refused to support the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision—a decision made five years ago. Not only has it rejected all efforts to enact necessary civil rights legislation, it has harassed the Court with legislative proposals aimed at overcoming civil liberties as well as civil rights rulings. Such harassment has been termed both "scandalous" and "appalling" by lawyers who have argued civil liberties cases before the Supreme Court.

Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., one such attorney, has declared that the assault on the Court is a "know-nothing attack" and that neither the desegregation decision nor the subversive decisions could "reasonably have been decided any other way."

Justice William O. Douglas has also voiced concern with the criticism of the Court. Speaking at the Columbia Law School, he warned that "despots dislike an independent judiciary." The Associate Justice stressed the importance of an independent judiciary holding the confidence of the people as essential to the continued success of American democracy.

No Back Seat

Douglas asserted that the Court "could not take a back seat" without disrupting the judicial check on executive and legislative action. He added that the American system has stability because the judiciary is viewed as a "great rock" unmoved by storms breaking over it, even when they lead to attempts at nullification."

Unfortunately, the logic of Justice Douglas is often swept aside by some who honestly believe their way of life is threatened. To these people, fear—based either on prejudice or a feeling of insecurity—overcomes the supposedly fundamental principles of civil liberties and rights.

Since the ABA's criticism and the reintroduction of H.R. 3, the Court has taken what the Washington Evening Star termed "a small turn to the right." Early in June, in two 5-4 decisions, the Court restricted the interpretation of two of its most controversial civil liberties rulings. Both of the new rulings amended decisions that had been under bitter attack.

In a case involving a state's right to enact laws prescribing state sedition, the Court upheld New Hampshire's right to convict Willard Uphaus of contempt for refusing to give its attorney general the guest list at a summer camp meeting of pacifists. The Court majority declared, in effect, that each state has an obligation to defend itself against subversion when such subversive activities are applied against the state rather than the federal government.

The second case involved the question of whether an individual could claim the first amendment as a constitutional reason for refusing to answer questions raised by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

In this case, Lloyd Barenblatt —a former Vassar psychology professor—was convicted of contempt for refusing to tell the committee whether he was then (1954) or had ever been a communist. In refusing to testify, Barenblatt claimed that under the First Amendment he could refuse to divulge his "religious" and "political" beliefs or any other "personal and private affairs" or his "associational activities."

Without ruling on whether the Fifth Amendment would provide a witness with the Constitutional protection sought by Barenblatt, the Court held that it is necessary to strike a balance between the interests of the individual in remaining silent and the interests of the government in obtaining information which it might need for its own self-preservation. The Court majority made it clear, however, that its ruling in favor of the government was based on the circumstances of the Barenblatt case and was not to be construed as opening the door for unlimited Congressional investigations.

Despite these two decisions, the opponents of the Court have not noticeably eased up on their cry of "soft on subversion." Only days after the Court's Uphaus opinion, the 33-member House Republican Policy Committee endorsed H.R. 3 as "a logical vehicle for the elimination of the doctrine of presumed federal preemption of state sovereignty." Conservative Democrats also have reiterated their intention of continuing to fight for passage of the Smith bill.

The supporters of the Smith bill and other legislation aimed at restricting the Court fail to recognize that America's real security lies in its freedom. In the long run, curbing the Court can only destroy that freedom.

Once the nation begins to give up pieces of the Bill of Rights, it will have started down the bleak road of repression that leads to eventual totalitarianism. America needs above all else to understand that total security is the antithesis of freedom.

Civil liberties and civil rights can never be lightly modified. This, in essence, is the reasoning behind the Supreme Court's desegregation and subversion decisions. It would be well for those who condemn the Court to think twice before using national security as the axe that chips away at America's Bill of Rights.

ture of their [illegible] in deception."

Progressive

The Cardinal and the ACLU

The American Civil Liberties Union, which serves the nation as the watchdog of the Bill of Rights, has been under frequent fire, but it has emerged with flying colors on just about every occasion. Sometimes its critics have been reduced to crying "Communist" or "fellow traveler."

[illegible]

[illegible] reply.

[illegible] Richard Cardinal Cushing, spokesman for the Catholic diocese of Boston, writing in the Boston Evening American, accused the ACLU of being "a pro-Communist front" and by way of documentation asserted that in Masters of Deceit, J. Edgar Hoover "relates a typical example of Red activity on the part of the ACLU."

The Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, under the chairmanship of the Reverend Gardiner M. Day of Cambridge, went into action immediately, pointing out that nowhere in his book did Hoover mention the ACLU. The Boston Evening American quickly retracted, agreeing not only that the ACLU was nowhere mentioned as a subversive organization but hastening on to point out that a number of Catholic publications and personalities had praised the work of the ACLU.

Cardinal Cushing's apology followed almost immediately. In a letter to the Reverend Day he wrote: "You are right, 100 per cent correct. The reference to the ACLU was a mistake. I apologize for it. I feel very upset about it, for it is my own fault—the copy was hurriedly prepared. . . . I feel awful about this matter. . . . I shall make amends in your behalf. Believe me please. Sorry, very sorry.

On a future occasion I certainly will be happy to commend the work of the American Civil Liberties Union. I beg God's choicest blessings upon you."

So ended the newest attack on the American Civil Liberties Union.

Murder in Defense

Much has been made of the government's purchase of the nation's sur-

Civil Liberties 1959

New South

MARTIN LUTHER KING

on

Love, Law and Civil Disobedience

BENJAMIN MUSE

on

Putnam's Anthropology

DECEMBER 1961

Strictly Subjective

By MARGARET LONG

New South

Published by
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Atlanta 3, Georgia

Volume 16 December 1961 Number 11

CONTENTS

Love, Law and Civil Disobedience 3

A Virginia View of Race and Reason 12

Strictly Subjective 2

OFFICERS

James McBride Dabbs . . . President
A. W. Dent . . . . . Vice President
Marion A. Wright . . Vice President
Josephine Wilkins . . Vice President
Rufus E. Clement . . . Vice President
John H. Wheeler Chm. Exec. Comm.
Leslie W. Dunbar . . Exec. Director
Margaret Long . . . . . Editor

New South is published 11 times a year. Subscription cost is $2 a year. Single copies are 20 cents each, or less in quantity.

WE ALL SHARED in the surge of pride which coursed from Albany, Ga., to the Justice Department in Washington when that rich and pleasant little city weathered demonstrations and arrests of more than 700 Negroes with impeccable policing and no blood in the streets.

Here was the first Negro uprising, an unique one of resolute Negroes of all ages and classes welcoming jail by the hundreds, in the dread deeps of South Georgia. The week-long demonstrations were appeased and halted without mob violence, police brutality or the long-predicted flow of blood in the streets. Indeed, the spacious and sunny streets of Albany, festooned with silver for Christmas business, remained quite unspattered by gore and unlittered with dead bodies. The proud relief of one and all over this happy circumstance moved Robert Kennedy to congratulate the Mayor of Albany and inspired the able young Police Chief Laurie Pritchett to observe that while his roots are deep in the South, he knows that times are changing and he proposes to meet them with law and order.

Only one white drunk raised a hostile fist over kneeling Negroes around the city hall, sang Dixie and was promptly popped into the pokey for exercising this ancient right of a Dixie drunk. One city jail guard hit a Negro prisoner and was immediately fired.

Still, as happy as we all are that Albany refrained from drawing blood, I think perhaps our pride may be excessive. I suggest that the Attorney-General nearly insults South Georgia with his congratulations to the city and disregard of appeals from jailed Negroes of the Albany movement.

I think we can expect better of

(Continued on Page 11)

Love, Law and Civil Disobedience

By Martin Luther King, Jr.

(A transcript of Dr. King's address to the annual meeting of the Fellowship of the Concerned, November 16 in Atlanta.)

MEMBERS of the Fellowship of the Concerned, of the Southern Regional Council, I need not pause to say how very delighted I am to be here today, and to have the opportunity of being a little part of this very significant gathering. I certainly want to express my personal appreciation to Mrs. Tilly and the members of the Committee, for giving me this opportunity. I would also like to express just a personal word of thanks and appreciation for your vital witness in this period of transition which we are facing in our Southland, and in the nation, and I am sure that as a result of this genuine concern, and your significant work in communities all across the South, we have a better South today and I am sure will have a better South tomorrow with your continued endeavor and I do want to express my personal gratitude and appreciation to you of the Fellowship of the Concerned for your significant work and for your forthright witness.

Now, I have been asked to talk about the philosophy behind the student movement. There can be no gainsaying of the fact that we confront a crisis in race relations in the United States. This crisis has been precipitated on the one hand by the determined resistance of reactionary forces in the South to the Supreme Court's decision in 1954 outlawing segregation in the public schools. And we know that at times this resistance has risen to ominous proportions. At times we find the legislative halls of the South ringing loud with such words as interposition and nullification. And all of these forces have developed into massive resistance. But we must also say that the crisis has been precipitated on the other hand by the determination of hundreds and thousands and millions of Negro people to achieve freedom and human dignity. If the Negro stayed in his place and accepted discrimination and segregation, there would be no crisis. But the Negro has a new sense of dignity, a new self respect, and new determination. He has re-evaluated his own intrinsic worth. Now this new sense of dignity on the part of the Negro grows out of the same longing for freedom and human dignity on the part of the oppressed people all over the world; for we see it in Africa, we see it in Asia, and we see it all over the world. Now we must say that this struggle for freedom will not come to an automatic halt, for history reveals to us that once oppressed people rise up against that oppression, there is no stopping point short of full freedom. On the other hand, history reveals to us that those who oppose the movement for freedom are those who are in privileged positions who very seldom give up their privileges without strong resistance. And they very seldom do it voluntarily. So the sense of struggle will continue. The question is how will the struggle be waged.

Now there are three ways that oppressed people have generally dealt with their oppression. One way is the method of acquiescence, the method of surrender; that is, the individuals will somehow adjust themselves to oppression, they adjust themselves to discrimination or to segregation or colonialism or what have you. The other method that has been used in history is that of rising up against the oppressor with corroding hatred and physical violence. Now of course we know about this method in western civilization, because in a sense it has been the hallmark of its grandeur, and the inseparable twin of western materialism. But there is a weakness in this method because it ends up creating many more social problems than it solves. And I am convinced that if the Negro succumbs to the temptation of using violence in his struggle for freedom and justice, unborn generations will be the recipients of a long and desolate night of bitterness. And our chief legacy to the future will be an endless reign of meaningless chaos.

But there is another way, namely the way of non-violent resistance. This method was popularized in our generation by a little man from India, whose name was Mohandas K. Gandhi. He used this method in a magnificent way to free his people from the economic exploitation and the political domination inflicted upon them by a foreign power.

This has been the method used by the student movement in the South and all over the United States. And naturally whenever I talk about the student movement I cannot be totally objective. I have to be somewhat subjective because of my great admiration for what the students have done. For in a real sense they have taken our deep groans and passionate yearnings for freedom, and filtered them in their own tender souls, and fashioned them into a creative protest which is an epic known all over our nation. As a result of their disciplined, non-violent, yet courageous struggle, they have been able to do wonders in the South, and in our nation. But this movement does have an underlying philosophy, it has certain ideas that are attached to it, it has certain philosophical precepts. These are the things that I would like to discuss for the few moments left.

I would say that the first point or the first principle in the movement is the idea that means must be as pure as the end. This movement is based on the philosophy that ends and means must cohere. Now this has been one of the long struggles in history, the whole idea of means and ends. Great philosophers have grappled with it, and sometimes they have emerged with the idea, from Machiavelli on down, that the end justifies the means. There is a great system of thought in our world today, known as Communism. And I think that with all of the weaknesses and tragedies of Communism, we find its greatest tragedy right here, that it goes under the philosophy that the end justifies the means that are used in the process. So we can read or we can hear the Lenins say that lying, deceit, or violence, that many of these things justify the ends of the classless society.

This is where the student movement and the non-violent movement that is taking place in our nation would break with Communism and any other system that would argue that the end justifies the means. For in the long run, we must see that the end represents the means in process and the ideal in the making. In other words, we cannot believe, or we cannot go with the idea that the end justifies the means because the end is pre-existent in the means. So the idea of non-violent resistance, the philosophy of non-violent resistance, is the philosophy which says that the means must be as pure as the end, that in the long run of history, immoral destructive means cannot bring about moral and constructive ends.

There is another thing about this philosophy, this method of non-violence which is followed by the student movement. It says that those who adhere to or follow this philosophy must follow a consistent principle of non-injury. They must consistently refuse to inflict injury upon another. Sometimes you will read the literature of the student movement and see that, as they are getting ready for the sit-in or stand-in, they will read something like this, "if you are hit do not hit back, if you are cursed do not curse back." This is the whole idea, that the individual who is engaged in a non-violent struggle must never inflict injury upon another. Now this has an external aspect and it has an internal one. From the external point of view it means that the individuals involved must avoid external physical violence. So they don't have guns, they don't retaliate with physical violence. If they are hit in the process, they avoid external physical violence at every point. But it also means that they avoid internal violence of spirit. This is why the love ethic stands so high in the student movement. We have a great deal of talk about love and non-violence in this whole thrust.

Now when the students talk about love, certainly they are not talking about emotional bosh, they are not talking about merely a sentimental outpouring; they're talking something much deeper, and I always have to stop and try to define the meaning of love in this context. The Greek language comes to our aid in trying to deal with this. There are three words in the Greek language for love, one is the word Eros. This is a beautiful type of love, it is an aesthetic love. Plato talks about it a great deal in his dialogue, the yearning of the soul for the realm of the divine. It has come to us to be a sort of romantic love, and so in a sense we have read about it and experienced it. We've read about it in all the beauties of literature. I guess in a sense Edgar Allan Poe was talking about Eros when he talked about his beautiful Annabelle Lee, with the love surrounded by the halo of eternity. In a sense Shakespeare was talking about Eros when he said "Love is not love which alters when alteration finds, or bends with the remover to remove; O, no! it is an ever fixed mark that looks on tempest and is never shaken, it is the star to every wandering bark." (You know, I remember that because I used to quote it to this little lady when we were courting; that's Eros.) The Greek language talks about Philia which was another level of love. It is an intimate affection between personal friends, it is a reciprocal love. On this level you love because you are loved. It is friendship.

Then the Greek language comes out with another word which is called the Agape. Agape is more than romantic love, agape is more than friendship. Agape is understanding, creative, redemptive, good will to all men. It is an overflowing love which seeks nothing in return. Theologians would say that it is the love of God operating in the human heart. So that when one rises to love on this level, he loves men not because he likes them, not because their ways appeal to him, but he loves every man because God loves him. And he rises to the point of loving the person who does an evil deed while hating the deed that the person does. I think this is what Jesus meant when he said "love your enemies." I'm very happy that he didn't say like your enemies, because it is pretty difficult to like some people. Like is sentimental, and it is pretty difficult to like someone bombing your home; it is pretty difficult to like somebody threatening your children; it is difficult to like congressmen who spend all of their time trying to defeat civil rights. But Jesus says love them, and love is greater than like. Love is understanding, redemptive, creative, good will for all men. And it is this idea, it is this whole ethic of love which is the idea standing at the basis of the student movement.

There is something else: that one seeks to defeat the unjust system, rather than individuals who are caught in that system. And that one goes on believing that somehow this is the important thing, to get rid of the evil system and not the individual who happens to be misguided, who happens to be misled, who was taught wrong. The thing to do is to get rid of the system and thereby create a moral balance within society.

Another thing that stands at the center of this movement is another idea: that suffering can be a most creative and powerful social force. Suffering has certain moral attributes involved, but it can be a powerful and creative social force. Now, it is very interesting at this point to notice that both violence and non-violence agree that suffering can be a very powerful social force. But there is this difference: violence says that suffering can be a powerful social force by inflicting the suffering on somebody else; so this is what we do in war, this is what we do in the whole violent thrust of the violent movement. It believes that you achieve some end by inflicting suffering on another. The non-violent say that suffering becomes a powerful social force when you willingly accept that violence on yourself, so that self-suffering stands at the center of the non-violent movement and the individuals involved are able to suffer in a creative manner, feeling that unearned suffering is redemptive, and that suffering may serve to transform the social situation.

Another thing in this movement is the idea that there is within human nature an amazing potential for goodness. There is within human nature something that can respond to goodness. I know somebody's liable to say that this is an unrealistic movement if it goes on believing that all people are good. Well, I didn't say that. I think the students are realistic enough to believe that there is a strange dichotomy of disturbing dualism within human nature. Many of the great philosophers and thinkers through the ages have seen this. It caused Ovid the Latin poet to say, "I see and approve the better things of life, but the evil things I do." It caused even St. Augustine to say "Lord, make me pure, but not yet." So that that is in human nature. Plato, centuries ago said that the human personality is like a charioteer with two headstrong horses, each wanting to go in different directions, so that within our own individual lives we see this conflict and certainly when we come to the collective life of man, we see a strange badness. But in spite of this there is something in human nature that can respond to goodness. So that man is neither innately good nor is he innately bad; he has potentialities for both. So in this sense, Carlyle was right when he said, that "there are depths in man which go down to the lowest hell, and heights which reach the highest heaven, for are not both heaven and hell made out of him, everlasting miracle and mystery that he is?" Man has the capacity to be good, man has the capacity to be evil.

And so the non-violent resister never lets this idea go, that there is something within human nature that can respond to goodness. So that a Jesus of Nazareth or a Mohandas Ghandi, can appeal to human beings and appeal to that element of goodness within them, and a Hitler can appeal to the element of evil within them. But we must never forget that there is something within human nature that can respond to goodness, that man is not totally depraved, to put it in theological terms, the image of God is never totally gone. And so the individuals who believe in this movement and who believe in non-violence and our struggle in the South, somehow believe that even the worst segregationist can become an integrationist. Now sometimes it is hard to believe that this is what this movement says, and it believes it firmly, that there is something within human nature that can be changed, and this stands at the top of the whole philosophy of the student movement and the philosophy of non-violence.

It says something else. It says that it is as much a moral obligation to refuse to cooperate with evil as it is to cooperate with good. Non-cooperation with evil is as much a moral obligation as the cooperation with good. So that the student movement is willing to stand up courageously on the idea of civil disobedience. Now I think this is the part of the student movement that is probably misunderstood more than anything else. And it is a difficult aspect, because on the one hand the students would say, and I would say, and all the people who believe in civil rights would say, obey the Supreme Court's decision of 1954 and at the same time, we would disobey certain laws that exist on the statutes of the South today.

This brings in the whole question of how can you be logically consistent when you advocate obeying some laws and disobeying other laws. Well, I think one would have to see the whole meaning of this movement at this point by seeing that the students recognize that there are two types of laws. There are just laws and there are unjust laws. And they would be the first to say obey the just laws, they would be the first to say that men and women have a moral obligation to obey just and right laws. And they would go on to say that we must see that there are unjust laws. Now the question comes into being, what is the difference, and who determines the difference, what is the difference between a just and an unjust law?

Well, a just law is a law that squares with a moral law. It is a law that squares with that which is right, so that any law that uplifts human personality is a just law. Whereas that law which is out of harmony with the moral is a law which does not square with the moral law of the universe. It does not square with the law of God, so for that reason it is unjust and any law that degrades the human personality is an unjust law.

Well, somebody says that that does not mean anything to me; first, I don't believe in these abstract things called moral laws and I'm not too religious, so I don't believe in the law of God; you have to get a little more concrete, and more practical. What do you mean when you say that a law is unjust, and a law is just? Well, I would go on to say in more concrete terms that an unjust law is a code that the majority inflicts on the minority that is not binding on itself. So that this becomes difference made legal. Another thing that we can say is that an unjust law is a code which the majority inflicts upon the minority, which that minority had no part in enacting or creating, because that minority had no right to vote in many instances, so that the legislative bodies that made these laws were not democratically elected. Who could ever say that the legislative body of Mississippi was democratically elected, or the legislative body of Alabama was democratically elected, or the legislative body even of Georgia has been democratically elected, when there are people in Terrell County and in other counties because of the color of their skin who cannot vote? They confront reprisals and threats and all of that; so that an unjust law is a law that individuals did not have a part in creating or enacting because they were denied the right to vote.

Now the same token of just law would be just the opposite. A just law becomes saneness made legal. It is a code that the majority, who happen to believe in that code, compel the minority, who don't believe in it, to follow, because they are willing to follow it themselves, so it is saneness made legal. Therefore the individuals who stand up on the basis of civil disobedience realize that they are following something that says that there are just laws and there are unjust laws. Now, they are not anarchists. They believe that there are laws which must be followed; they do not seek to defy the law, they do not seek to evade the law. For many individuals who would call themselves segregationists and who would hold on to segregation at any cost seek to defy the law, they seek to evade the law, and their process can lead on into anarchy. They seek in the final analysis to follow a way of uncivil disobedience, not civil disobedience. And I submit that the individual who disobeys the law, whose conscience tells him it is unjust and who is willing to accept the penalty by staying in jail until that law is altered, is expressing at the moment the very highest respect for law.

This is what the students have followed in their movement. Of course there is nothing new about this, they feel that they are in good company and rightly so. We go back and read the Apology and the Crito, and you see Socrates practicing civil disobedience. And to a degree academic freedom is a reality today because Socrates practiced civil disobedience. The early Christians practiced civil disobedience in a superb manner, to a point where they were willing to be thrown to the lions. They were willing to face all kinds of suffering in order to stand up for what they knew was right even though they knew it was against the laws of the Roman Empire.

We could come up to our own day and we see it in many instances. We must never forget that everything that Hitler did in Germany was "legal." It was illegal to aid and comfort a Jew, in the days of Hitler's Germany. But I believe that if I had the same attitude then as I have now I would publicly aid and comfort my Jewish brothers in Germany if Hitler were alive today calling this an illegal process. If I lived in South Africa today in the midst of the white supremacy law in South Africa, I would join Chief Luthuli and others in saying break these unjust laws. And even let us come up to America. Our nation in a sense came into being through a massive act of civil disobedience, for the Boston Tea Party was nothing but a massive act of civil disobedience. Those who stood up against the slave laws, the abolitionists, by 1 large practiced civil disobedience. I think these students are in good npany, and they feel that by prac-ing civil disobedience they are in line with men and women through the ages who have stood up for something that is morally right.

Now there are one or two other things that I want to say about this student movement, moving out of the philosophy of non-violence, something about what it is a revolt against. On the one hand it is a revolt against the negative peace that has encompassed the South for many years. I remember when I was in Montgomery, Ala., one of the white citizens came to me one day and said—and I think he was very sincere about this—that in Montgomery for all of these years we have been such a peaceful community, we have had so much harmony in race relations and then you people have started this movement and boycott, and it has done so much to disturb race relations, and we just don't love the Negro like we used to love them, because you have destroyed the harmony and the peace that we once had in race relations. And I said to him, in the best way I could say and I tried to say it in non-violent terms, we have never had peace in Montgomery, Ala., we have never had peace in the South. We have had a negative peace, which is merely the absence of tension; we've had a negative peace in which the Negro patiently accepted his situation and his plight, but we've never had true peace, we've never had positive peace, and what we're seeking now is to develop this positive peace. For we must come to see that peace is not merely the absence of some negative force, it is the presence of a positive force. True peace is not merely the absence of tension, but it is the presence of justice and brotherhood. I think this is what Jesus meant when he said, I come not to bring peace but a sword. Now Jesus didn't mean he came to start war, to bring a physical sword, and he didn't mean, I come not to bring positive peace. But I think what Jesus was saying in substance was this, that I come not to bring an old negative peace, which makes for stagnant passivity and deadening complacency, I come to bring something different, and whenever I come, a conflict is precipitated, between the old and the new, whenever I come a struggle takes place between justice and injustice, between the forces of light and the forces of darkness. I come not to bring a negative peace, but a positive peace, which is brotherhood, which is justice, which is the Kingdom of God.

And I think this is what we are seeking to do today, and this movement is a revolt against a negative peace and a struggle to bring into being a positive peace, which makes for true brotherhood, true integration, true person-to-person relationships. This movement is also revolt against what is often called tokenism. Here again many people do not understand this, they feel that in this struggle the Negro will be satisfied with tokens of integration, just a few students and a few schools here and there and a few doors open here and there. But this isn't the meaning of the movement and I think that honesty impels me to admit it everywhere I have an opportunity, that the Negro's aim is to bring about complete integration in American life. And he has come to see that token integration is little more than token democracy, which ends up with many new evasive schemes and it ends up with new discrimination, covered up with such niceties of complexity. It is very interesting to discover that the movement has thrived in many communities that had token integration. So this reveals that the movement is based on a principle that integration must become real and complete, not just token integration.

It is also a revolt against what I often call the myth of time. We hear this quite often, that only time can solve this problem. That if we will only be patient, and only pray—which we must do, we must be patient and we must pray—but there are those who say just do these things and wait for time, and time will solve this problem. Well, the people who argue this do not themselves realize that time is neutral, that it can be used constructively or destructively. At points the people of ill will, the segregationists, have used time much more effectively than the people of good will. So individuals in the struggle must come to realize that it is necessary to aid time, that without this kind of aid, time itself will become an ally of the insurgent and primitive forces of social stagnation. Therefore, this movement is a revolt against the myth of time.

There is a final thing that I would like to say to you, this movement is a movement based on faith in the future. It is a movement based on a philosophy, the possibility of the future bringing into being something real and meaningful. It is a movement based on hope. I think this is very important. The students have developed a theme song for their movement, maybe you've heard it. It goes something like this, "we shall overcome, deep in my heart, I do believe, we shall overcome," and then they go on to say another verse, "we are not afraid, we are not afraid today, deep in my heart I do believe, we shall overcome." So it is out of this deep faith in the future that they are able to move out and adjourn the councils of despair, and to bring new light in the dark chambers of pessimism. I can remember the times that we've been together, I remember that night in Montgomery, Ala., when we had stayed up all night, discussing the Freedom Rides, and that morning came to see that it was necessary to go on with the Freedom Rides, that we would not in all good conscience call an end to the Freedom Rides at that point. And I remember the first group got ready to leave, to take a bus for Jackson, Miss., we all joined hands and started singing together. "We shall overcome, we shall overcome." And something within me said, now how is it that these students can sing this, they are going down to Mississippi, they are going to face hostile and jeering mobs, and yet they could sing," We shall overcome." They may even face physical death, and yet they could sing, "We shall overcome." Most of them realized that they would be thrown into jail, and yet they could sing, "We shall overcome, we are not afraid." Then something caused me to see at that moment the real meaning of the movement. That students had faith in the future. That the movement was based on hope, that this movement had something within it that says somehow even though the arc of the moral universe is long, it bends toward justice. And I think this should be a challenge to all others who are struggling to transform the dangling discords of our Southland into a beautiful symphony of brotherhood. There is something in this student movement which says to us, that we shall overcome. Before the victory is won some may have to get scarred up, but we shall overcome. Before the victory of brotherhood is achieved, some will maybe face physical death, but we shall overcome. Before the victory is won, some will lose jobs, some will be called Communists, and reds, merely because they believe in brotherhood, some will be dismissed as dangerous rabblerousers and agitators merely because they're standing up for what is right, but we shall overcome. That is the basis of this movement, and as I like to say, there is something in this universe that justifies Carlyle in saying no lie can live forever. We shall overcome because there is something in this universe which justifies William Cullen Bryant in saying truth crushed to earth shall rise again. We shall overcome because there is something in this universe that justifies James Russell Lowell in saying, truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne. Yet that scaffold sways the future, and behind the dim unknown standeth God within the shadows, keeping watch above His own. With this faith in the future, with this determined struggle, we will be able to emerge from the bleak and desolate midnight of man's inhumanity to man, into the bright and glittering daybreak of freedom and justice. Thank you.

Strictly Subjective

(Continued from Page 2)

South Georgia, which is, to be sure, burdened with many deprived and ignorant Negroes and many deprived, ignorant and race-proud whites. But in every community there are ministers preaching that all humans are equal children of God, business men jealous of their prosperity, literally Christian churchwomen, lonely thinkers on the rights of man and plain people pondering the revolution which occupies us.

Albany is the very gem of Southwest Georgia, a city so handsome, prosperous and progressive with industry and military payrolls, surrounding rich farms and retail and wholesale trade, and the rationality and humanity which attends these blessings, that on reflection it seems the city failed rather than triumphed in its lawful and unjust punishment of its gently demanding and self-sacrificing Negroes.

Can we really cherish pride that 737 Negroes, representing what they say is 90 per cent of their people and 43 per cent of Albany's citizenry, were jailed for peaceably, mildly and prayerfully walking their own streets to protest arrest of Freedom Riders testing a "desegregated" railroad waiting room, and refusal of their elected officials to hear them?

Albany has the prettiest and widest streets in South Georgia, maybe in the United States, ample to accommodate a march of Negroes, two by two, or hundreds kneeling or singing before the city hall. Is there not room here for such assembly to remain peaceful, with careful policing? Isn't there room for citizens to walk on such streets without civic and business paralysis? Apparently white bystanders of Albany and from long-dreaded nearby counties—the so-called "violent" element which has intimidated the decent South—apparently these allegedly brutal racists thought there was room. At least they were not moved by the "explosive" spectacles to race rioting.

So, it seems that Albany maintained the peace at needless expense to brave and respectable men, women and children clapped into jail for free assembly, peaceful demonstration and natural demands on arrogant, if law-abiding, white officials.

I think Albany, and its neighboring counties, can do better than the leadership of its cynical newspaper, The

(Continued on Page 16)

A Virginia View of "Race and Reason"

By Benjamin Muse

SOME OF THE misinformation and scientific error which we have to combat in Virginia and the South I find gathered together in handy form in a book which descended upon us last summer entitled Race and Reason. This book is written in a scholarly style; it is redolent with erudition and crowded with impressive allusions. But in substance it is like the exhortation of a Ku Klux Kleagle who has exchanged his bed sheet for an academic cap and gown. If the reader has abundant patience and a strong stomach, it can serve a useful purpose as a compendium of current misinformation on the subject of race.

A casual reader who is new to the subject, or whose reading has been confined to the Citizens Council type of commentary, might guess from the text that the author had devoted a long career to scientific studies related to the races of man. But the author is Mr. Carleton Putnam, a former airlines executive, who retired six years ago and turned first to writing biography — a biography of Theodore Roosevelt. His career as an anthropologist started three years ago, and that more or less by accident.

Mr. Putnam is a Northerner, a "Yankee,' as the cover of his book proclaims—which lends a flavor of generous comradeship and dramatic emphasis to his message. He was seized with a feeling that the segregationists of the South were getting the runaround in the national controversy, and he resolved to bring his superior talents to their rescue. "I could not but believe," he explained in his book, "that so far as it lay within my powers my purpose should be to embolden their anthropologists and relieve their consciences."

It was an article by our own Virginius Dabney and an editorial rebuttal, which appeared in Life Magazine in September, 1958, which kindled the flame in Mr. Putnam's bosom. He rallied to the segregationist cause in a letter to Life, then a longer one to President Eisenhower and one to Attorney General Rogers. The first two of these letters received only perfunctory acknowledgment and the third was not acknowledged. But copies of the so-called "Putnam letters" were widely circulated and published in the South. A committee in Birmingham, Alabama, raised upwards of $40,000 and had the letter to the President reprinted as advertising in various Northern newspapers. Though the letters and their author were thunderously ignored in the rest of the nation, Carleton Putnam was hailed in the South as a "Daniel come to judgment." He was "overwhelmed," to use his own words, "with courtly expressions of gratitude."

The demand for a more extensive expression of Mr. Putnam's views was obvious; hence Race and Reason. The author worked with a celerity which was remarkable. By the following August the book was practically written; on August 3 he addressed a manuscript to various persons, among whom I had the honor of being included, for possible comment. Where lesser men had spent a lifetime in laborious pursuit of anthropological truth, Mr. Putnam in ten months had exhausted the accumulation of pertinent scientific knowledge and found the answers. He came down from the mountain with the final peremptory truth locked in his handsome brief case.

(Author, journalist, politician and traveler, Mr. Muse is now director of SRC's Southern Leadership Project)

I met the author at a dinner while the book was incubating, and let me say that Mr. Putnam is a gentleman of distinguished presence and impeccable courtesy. He is sincere, I think, in his belief that he has uncovered a transcendental truth that others who have dabbled in anthropology have been unable to grasp. I was surprised, however, when he asked me to recommend some books on the race problem, as he hadn't read much in this field.

In our brief conversation, Mr. Putnam was obsessed with what he calls "equalitarianism." He argued from the unshakable premise that the opponents of segregation are trying to make all men equal.

In a brief correspondence which we had, I wrote to Mr. Putnam:

"I might go farther than you in advocating discrimination, in the sense of selectivity, in education. I submit that your basic error lies in using race as a criterion."

It seems as simple as that. But the "equalitarianism" confusion runs all the way through Race and Reason, and its segregationist readers are given a long new word to apply to their opponents. "Equalitarians" are denounced with monotonous redundancy.

I don't know any equalitarians; none of us seeks to make all men equal in personal attainment, or imagines that such a thing would be possible. But, though "equalitarianism" may be a new word to some, the idea which it vaguely suggests is familiar to all of us, and it is one of the major stumbling blocks on the road to interracial understanding. Mr. Putnam's confusion is the confusion of thousands of even well-meaning Southerners. Integration is envisioned as a process of bringing poor, ignorant and uncouth Negroes in to have dinner with educated white people, or into the Country Club. Many a white person is afraid that his expensive restaurant will be invaded by Negro janitors; it never seems to occur to him that white share-croppers never visit his restaurant.

All of us believe in deference to intellect and ability. No one wants to see an unskilled laborer, whether white or colored, accorded the same respect, rewards and privileges as the president of Harvard University, for instance — or the president of Howard University. The monstrous error lies, of course, in judging any individual by his race.

Mr. Putnam is apparently prepared to stand or fall on the proposition that Negroes are inferior in innate ability to whites, but he has gathered together in Race and Reason a few odds and ends not directly related to his anthropological thesis. He doesn't raise this unpleasant subject himself, but when a correspondent asks the question, he says: "The Communists have made the integration movement a part of their conspiracy."

We have heard that smear ad nauseum, and we have found that those who throw it around are rarely capable of rational cogitation. But one comment occurs to me in passing. The Communists do pose as enemies of race discrimination, and, by the apparent rule-of-thumb, we should be against anything the Communists are for and for anything the Communists are against. Now I read that the Communists are taking measures against alcoholism and that they are sternly in favor of sexual morality. It seems obvious that those who are completely hostile to Communism should go on an alcoholic binge. And, if sexual morality is a part of the Communist conspiracy, where does that leave the red-blooded superpatriot?

Another one of the simple-minded people who provided Mr. Putnam with questions asked:

"It makes my blood boil every time I see a Southerner bully, humiliate or exploit a Negro. How can anyone take sides with such people?"

The thought doesn't make Mr. Putnam's blood boil. His answer:

"Two wrongs don't make a right. The fact that it is wrong to bully, humiliate or exploit a Negro does not make it right to integrate him. . . ."

It is obvious that the white man who bullies a Negro is not on the point of integrating him, and we are left with the essential answer: "Two wrongs don't make a right."

That would not be the Ku Klux Klan answer; it is a cut above that. The Klansman views bullying Negroes as a wholly righteous exercise and, if the Negro doesn't resist, he sees no wrong on either side. The two-wrongs comment is an apt illustration of the attitude of the more decorous Citizens Councils and of a shockingly large element of the white public. It is evidenced in the common practice of arresting Negro victims and allowing white bullies to go free. After interracial violence, however orderly and passive and irreproachable the behavior of the Negro victims may have been in the face of white aggression, we hear the unctuous comment: "There are two sides to the question." — or: "Both sides were at fault."

When a white man bullies a Negro, it is not one wrong but two. The Negro is also wrong. He is wrong just by being a Negro, and, when he is unhappy with segregation his sin is compounded.

Mr. Putnam probably didn't mean to be as blunt as that. A strain of lofty benevolence runs through most of his book. Following a familiar practice of racist propagandists, he calls great and good men to the witness stand however remote in time or place their range of vision may have been from the situation to which his argument is addressed. The author quotes voluminously from Lincoln's reflections on the situation which he observed over a century ago, and to be perfectly fair he quotes also from Lincoln's debating contemporary, Stephen A. Douglas; he cites the comment of Lord Bryce on conditions existing in 1880; he brings in observations of the saintly Albert Schweitzer on the savages of Lambaréné as if that great humanitarian were talking about the Negro American; he even invokes the noble eloquence of William Ewart Gladstone. The English statesman made no reference whatever to the subject of race, but it was nice to have him associated with Mr. Putnam and his book.

At the same time other famous names are withered with the Putnam frown. Arnold Toynbee is demolished with a wisecrack. Franz Boas is browbeaten without mercy; the world had a high opinion of Boas as an authority on the races of man, but the retired airlines executive met him in his own field and laid him low.

The thesis which Mr. Putnam pursues with such devastating vigor is the notion, once widely held among scholars, that the Negro is limited by his racial origin and is innately inferior to the white man. That notion is still widely held, admittedly or subconsciously, by an enormous element of the white public. It is the very essence of race prejudice in so far as race prejudice has a rational basis. In recent years that theory has been blasted in many quarters by the sheer demonstration of Negro capability, and I think in not many more years the weight of such evidence against the theory of Negro inferiority will be overwhelming. As educational and employment opportunities are opened to him, the Negro American is rushing forward in intellectual, cultural and economic achievement.

In the entire 19th Century fewer than 2,500 Negroes graduated from college in the United States. In 1930, 27,141 Negro Americans were in college, and in 1956, 196,000. With increasing integration, accurate estimates are no longer available but the number must now have gone over 200,000. The image of the Negro American is changing all the time and it will change mightily with each new class of Negro college graduates which enters the stream of our national life.

Scientists have long since repudiated the theory of innate inferiority. Dr. Oscar Handlin, Pulitzer Prize-winning historian and Harvard professor, who traced the rise and collapse of the racist theory in his Race and Nationality in American Life, said: "By 1940 it was difficult to find a serious, reputable exponent of the racist views once so widely held."

That, of course, was written in 1957, before Mr. Putnam turned his attention to anthropology. Other reputable exponents seem to have come forward. Dr. Wesley Critz George, a retired professor of zoology, anatomy, etc. at the University of North Carolina, 73 years of age, spent last summer in a study of "what science has revealed with regard to racial differences," and will shortly publish his report. What science revealed to Dr. George has not been publicly stated, but, as he was paid $3,000 for the undertaking from the emergency fund of Governor John Patterson of Alabama, there is little doubt as to the kind of revelations which were ordered.

Mr. Putnam recommended a reading of an article by Dr. Frank C. J. McGurk, which appeared in United States News and World Report in 1956. But he neglected to recommend the reading of a public statement from eighteen of the nation's leading anthropologists and psychologists which followed the McGurk article. In the latter statement it was noted that the American Anthropological Association and the division of the American Psychological Association concerned with social issues, among others, had placed themselves on record as opposed to the conclusion that race was a determiner of innate psychological characteristics. Then these 18 scientists from the nation's leading universities stated flatly that "any decision to use differences in the average achievement of the two racial groups as a basis for classifying in advance any individual child, Negro or white, is scientifically unjustified."

Mr. Putnam states that Southerners "talk of states' rights when they should be talking anthropology." Perhaps he is right. Ten days ago the anthropologists of the United States issued a resounding statement. It is pertinent to note that this was not the expression of a few eccentrics, of a "leftist" faction, or any faction. The resolution was adopted by the American Anthropolog-

(Continued on Page 16)

New South

Strictly Subjective

(Continued from Page 11)

Herald, its arrogant mayor and city commission and its lawfully unimpeachable police chief suggests.

Surely when the "truce" is over, these people will see, talk to, understand and deal with the just demands of Negroes in a more civilized, South Georgia and American manner.

A Virginia View

(Continued from Page 15)

ical Association by a vote of 192 to 0, and it read:

"The American Anthropological Association repudiates statements now appearing in the United States that Negroes are biologically and in innate mental ability inferior to whites, and reaffirms the fact that there is no scientifically established evidence to justify the exclusion of any race from the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

"The basic principles of equality of opportunity and equality before the law are compatible with all that is known about human biology. All races possess the abilities needed to participate fully in the democratic way of life and in modern technological civilization."

Bearing witness to the truth is basic to all that we do in the movement for equality of all Southerners and Americans. All that we do to eliminate discrimination in its practical manifestations is an expression of the truth, a reconciliation of the American ideal with truth, in the matter of race. And just as widespread error has clouded the controversy and produced a degree of intellectual debasement in many quarters, it is the truth which ultimately will make us free.

USE THIS CONVENIENT ORDER FORM FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO NEW SOUTH

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

Room 201, 5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Atlanta 3, Georgia

Please enter my subscription to NEW SOUTH for one year, effective with the next issue. Enclosed is my check, or money order, for $2.00.

NAME _____

STREET _____

CITY _____ STATE _____